The American intelligence which has just reached this country contains a formal protest from the President of the United States against the investigation proposed by Congress into his official acts. At the same critical moment a strange chance has brought to light a document which is likely to exercise no small influence in the direction and formation of public opinion as to the value and stability of American institutions. A New York paper has given publicity to a letter of Lord Macaulay, containing his estimate of the character of Jefferson, and of the effect of the changes of which he was the author upon the future destiny of America. It is interesting to see what were the real sentiments of a man who had devoted a studious life and a clear and penetrating intellect to the study of history and the analysis of political institutions on the great experiment of democratic self-government which is working itself out on the other side of the Atlantic. We are repeatedly told that we are about to Americanize our institutions, and this Americanization is represented to us as the greatest of calamities.—Others admit the excellence of American institutions, but assert that they are beyond our reach from the difference between the conditions of society in a new and an old country. These questions have become of great importance for the discussion on the coming Reform Bill, and the positively clear and distinct treatment to which Lord Macaulay subjected all things which furnished a theme for his pen will give great assistance to the candid thinker. He being dead still speaks with all his usual eloquence and clearness, and as usual with him, in no hesitating or qualifying spirit. On the 25th of May, 1857, Lord Macaulay writes: That he has not a high opinion of Mr. Jefferson; that he never uttered a word indicating an opinion that the supreme authority in the state ought to be intrusted to the majority of citizens, told by the head, i in other words, the poorest and most ignorant part of society. Institutions purely democratic must sooner or later destroy liberty and civilization, or both. In Europe, where the population is dense, the effect of such institutions would be instantaneous. America enjoys no exemption from these evils. The time will come when New England will be as thickly peopled as Old England; hundreds of thousands of artizans will miserably be sometimes out of work. Then the institutions of Avastra, Lord Macaulay thinks, will fairly be brought to the test. The rich will be robbed to feed the poor. We have these critical moments in England, but the sufferers are not the rulers, and nothing therefore is done which promotes prosperity returning. In America the sufferers are the rulers, and Lord Macaulay thinks that some Cæsar or Napoleon will arise, who will destroy liberty, or the Republic will be plundered by a hungry multitude possessed of power, who will destroy or very greatly injure civilization.

Such is an abridgment of this remarkable profession of faith, and from it we can gather that Lord Macaulay was no admirer of American institutions,—that he believed them to be founded on a false principle, the working of which might be delayed by physical causes, but which would sooner or later bury the Republic under the ruins of its liberty and civilization; and that here, in England, where no physical cause intervenes to save us, the effects of such a constitution would operate with the utmost certainty and rapidity. This expression of opinion obviously divides itself into two parts—that which relates to America, and that which relates to England. After all considering the tendency [illegible] of human things, the prospect of a crisis which is not to take effect till we are considerably advanced in the twentieth century may not have much terror for the American Republic young as it is, has witnessed the French Revolution, the wars of Napoleon, the upheaving of 1830, and the general overthrow of 1848. Even the most prostrate worshipers of democracy do not, so far as we know, pretend that it possesses the Divine right which Austria and Russia still claim for the kingly office, and they may not feel greatly disturbed at that which is to come to pass in the days of their great grandchildren. The evils of the American Government do not, unfortunately, require a hundred years to ripen. They are even now fast growing to maturity. Long before New England shall have become as populous as Old England, long before the ruling power in the State shall find itself in the condition of wanting a meal and be driven by indigence to plunder, there is reason to fear that the institutions of America will have run their destined career and been superseded by something far less specious, and perhaps far less tolerable, than they are.—We do not speak of electoral corruption and intimidation; we know by experience that corruption and intimidation are disorders which, though disgracing and enfeebling, are not mortal; but we do not speak of the frightfully increasing corruption and venality of the Executive and Legislatures of the different States; of the tyranny of the majority, which tramples not only on the minority, but on the law itself; of the contempt into which the judicial office, held for short periods and elected by a very low franchise, has fallen; and of the utter distrust which the nation itself feels of the ability of its institutions to answer the end and objects of civilized government—the security of property, the protection of individual liberty, and the pure and upright administration of the public revenue. The danger that most nearly besets America is, that those institutions which the fathers of the present generation of Americans believed to be perfect, and praised with an ardor corresponding to their belief, the children of the present generations of Americans should learn to loathe and despise; that the principle of authority and the veneration for law should be destroyed, and no curb should remain strong enough to rein in the headlong course of democratic passion. If we turn from Lord Macaulay's view of American institutions on an ancient and established State, we cannot doubt for a moment the correctness of his opinions. Without undertaking to predict what may happen in some more advanced period of the world, when machinery shall have superseded the ruder kinds of manual labor and left to the unaided mind, working with Lord Macaulay, that to which the supreme authority in the State in the hands of the majority of citizens would produce almost instantaneous ruin. We need look no other cause than ignorance. The real interest of the working man is that capital should be preserved and every inducement held out to its accumulation, because upon that capital he must live. But shortsighted ignorance tells him to waste that capital by thefts, or drive it away by unfair taxation; he cannot generalize sufficiently to understand that the interests of the poor is identical with that of the rich, and, therefore, that identity affords no guarantee that the property of the rich will be respected by him. A single act of misGovernment appointed by and responsible to the poor in the direction of taxation or a redivision of property would disorder like an exhalation our gigantic fabric of credit, would close our manufactories, empty our workshops, choke up our harbors with rotting merchant ships, and, while annihilating private enterprise, would destroy the public revenue.

Happily we are in no such condition, and we are not by any means prepared to say that the coming Reform Bill reduce us to such a state. It does not propose to give the power of government, as in the case supposed by Lord Macaulay, to a numerical majority of the citizens told by the head; but we think that we are authorized to say that it vests the supreme authority in this country in a poor and ignorant class.—Lord Macaulay could say, in 1857, that in England the supreme power was in the hands of a class, numerous indeed, but select—of an educated class, of a class which is and knows itself to be deeply interested in the security of property and the maintenance of order. Shall we be able to say as much after the franchise has been lowered to a £6 rental in the boroughs? That is the momentous question. Of those who answer it in the affirmative we would inquire whether they are quite sure that the same process which has brought a much higher franchise down to universal suffrage in America may not be found as efficacious in England for the same end. Of those who answer this question in the negative we would inquire how they purpose to prevent the country when the supreme power has been placed in the hands of the class which they admit they do not trust. They will probably tell us that their confidence is in those means of indirect influence by which the advance of Democracy has hitherto been retarded; in other words, that the safety of the country will depend upon a far wider and more indiscriminate use of the arts of intimidation and corruption; that the dominant class will never learn the secret of its own absolute power, or having learnt that secret, will feel no disposition to use that power.

ENGLAND, FRANCE, AND NEWFOUNDLAND.

AN AMERICAN VIEW.

The Philadelphia American thus comments on a recent speech of Mr. Haliburton in the House of Commons:—

"It appears that England is never without a grievance, nor France without a design. 'Fruits is out, cats is in,' as Sam Weller says. Savoy dished and swallowed, to England's disgust, another treat in the cod and oyster-line is preparing for her on this continent, by the ubiquitous Emperor whose influence pervades the world. He is resolved there shall be no peace for the wicked—no, nor for the righteous. Aggressive England, haughty Austria, confiding Italy, inoffensive Switzerland, are equally the objects of his delicate attention, and somehow of other are made to suffer from it. These observations are a prelude to our noticing a speech recently made in the British House of Commons by Mr. Haliburton, a gentleman whose name is well known in connection with Canadian affairs. The honorable member called the attention of the House and of the government to the proceedings of the French on the coast of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, and the two small islands, St. Pierre and Miquelon, or Michelon.—They are barren, and of no value in themselves, so far as their natural wealth is concerned. But, owing to their position, they are of great geographical and political importance. These islands were ceded by Great Britain to France by the treaty of Paris in 1814.

* * * * * * *

"It would seem that Napoleon III. does not consider himself bound by the treaties entered into by his Bourbon and Orleans predecessors—at all events, they do not interfere in the least with his projects. According to Mr. Haliburton, who claims to have an intimate personal knowledge of the locality, there are now fortifications on St Pierre, and the island has been recently made a naval station, a large coal depot has been placed there, and a large body of armed men, sailors and marines, is doing garrison duty. Two war steamers cruise in the harbor of Cape Breton, under pretence of receiving the mails from the Cunard boats. No less than between 30,000 and 40,000 men are engaged in the fisheries, and they are all registered seamen, liable to be called upon for service in the French navy. These men have absolutely taken possession of the fisheries on the south coast of Newfoundland, and have lately pushed their operations round to the west, into St. George's Bay, where they have the audacity to give notice to two thousand British subjects to remove, upon pain of having their houses pulled down about their ears in case of refusal. So much irritation had their conduct occasioned, that it was feared bloodshed would ensue. Such is the statement made by Mr. Haliburton, and, if it be a correct one, it certainly merits attention.

"We have so often called the attention of our readers to the designs of the Emperor of the French, that it would be superfluous to dilate upon them now. We may, however, observe that wherever France gets a foothold the place is immediately converted into an arsenal, a garrison, a depot, and a menace. In this way Savoy will be made the head-quarters of a powerful division of the French army, and a flotilla, "for the protection and dignity of France," will soon be launched upon the Lake of Geneva.—Nice, as soon as it shall be conquered, will be strongly garrisoned, and the Alpine passes will be épaulés in readiness for military operations. In like manner the Suez canal is destined to be the pass by which French fleets and armies, and not merely French commerce, shall reach India. The Nicaragua transit is intended for a short cut to Oceanica and China, for similar purposes.—In conjunction with the disaffected French of Lower Canada, it is doubtless intended, in case of a war with England, to make an attack upon British America and the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon would serve as a basis for offensive operations. It is probable that, but for the possession of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia by England, the French Government would have made itself master of these colonies, and thus, with the Island of Anticosti in its hands, it would have the navigation of the St. Lawrence completely under its own control.

"Of course, we cannot foresee that such an event will ever occur, should a war take place between England and France, but we are decidedly of opinion that the interest of this country would not be benefitted by the transfer of the British colonies to the dominion of France. These colonies in the time, and in the natural order of things, probably by the operation of public opinion only, and without a struggle with the mother-country, will one day become members of the Union. Identity of race, language, religion, distance, laws, feelings all are in opposition to bring about such a result; and England, grown wise by experience, and liberal by enlightenment, is well aware of this. We assume that she would not seriously oppose the decidedly expressed desire of the Colonists for annexation to ourselves. But it would be a horse of another color, if the majority of France had to be consulted. We should thus have an antagonist to deal with. Moreover, to permit anything like the [illegible] of French colonies [illegible] would be a direct violation of the Monroe doctrine, as well as the positive engagement, in so many words, made to the Council of 1860.

England to occupy Honduras, or Spain to reconquer Mexico.

"The Minister (Lord John Russell) to whom Mr. Haliburton addressed his observations did not respond to the interpellation.' Perhaps this St. Pierre business may be one among the many causes of anxiety which the Emperor is giving the British ministry, and, like the Savoy question, in case of future awkward affairs about which they would prefer to say as little as possible. It is not pleasant to have a neighbor who is continually annoying us, but yet does not do anything sufficiently serious to justify an open quarrel with him. Constant irritation is worse than a fight, which lets off the steam and the bad blood at the same time.

"We ought not to omit noticing that by the treaty between this country and England, concluded in 1854, liberty was secured to our fishermen to fish on all the English coasts and bays in North America, and to repair their ships and salt their fish therein. Any interference with the right thus guaranteed to us demands the attention of our government. Great Britain is bound, to the utmost of her power, to secure to us the full enjoyment of this right. Therefore she ought to take steps to prevent the encroachments of the French fishermen, for our sake if not for her own. And we are bound to support her in such action as she may legitimately take in the matter."

THE TOWN ASSESSMENT.

At the Court of Revision on Tuesday night some figures and facts were presented for the consideration of the Court, both in respect to Real and Personal Property. In looking over the Assessment Rolls from 1854, we find an increase on the annual value each year—

Year.	Total value Real property.	Income.	An. val. Personal Property pers'l	Real &
1855....	£146794	£23373	£25185	£13544
1856....	170868	40853		14884
1857....	198307	22485	25930	16824
1858....	215079	16400	27675	17741
1859....	230719	14500	25930	18283
1860....	321124	14300	29215	16004

Under some of the heads there is a diminution, the most remarkable of which, is under the head of income. We find a decrease each year until this, when it stands the same as last. The Court of Revision will probably reduce this, as several complaints are before it of being assessed for income. The value of real estate has advanced; notwithstanding, there appears in the value something like £34,000 less than last year. This is accounted for by the assessors this year putting down the property more in accordance to its actual value, than turning the rental into real at 6 per cent. Thus where a party pays £15 rent a year the value of the building at 6 per cent would be £750, whereas in many places £500 would be as much as it was worth. The annual value of real property which is the true criterion stands as follows:—

1855....	£12790
1856....	12899
1857....	13624
1858....	15024
1859....	15855
1860....	16067 showing steady advancement.

Personal property went down in the last year to the same amount as in 1857. This year it has risen some £3300. The total annual value for this year is some £400 more than last, which at the same rate as last year will give us about £30. The Court of Revision will probably reduce some parties' assessments, but they talk also of raising others.

In looking over the statement for the City of Toronto, there appears a considerable falling off of 10 per cent, showing the annual value of real and personal taxable property for this year, but a little more than it was in 1854, whilst the Town of Peterborough has gained 40 per cent. We give below the annual value of real and personal property of the City of Toronto for the last 10 years. In comparing the figures since 1854 with our own, we will perceive the slow but steady steps we make onwards.—Our history is not one of high pressure and collapses, but "slow and sure" is recorded of the inhabitants and place. Peterboro' for an inland Town is second to none in the Province for its commercial prosperity and the integrity of its business men.

The lumber operations in the rear, diffuses activity and life in every department. The products of the field are poured into its granaries. The manufacturing interests are exhibiting, and when Mr. S. Dickson gets the work contracted he has now on hand, facilities will exist for an illimitable water power to drive any and every kind of machinery. Our good Town we feel convinced is destined to be a place of note among the towns of Canada.

☞ On our [illegible] will be found the Auditor's Report [illegible] Statement of Receipts and Expenditures of the Town for last year. We publish it for the information of our readers and the rate-payers generally. If the rate-payers take a livelier interest in the manner in which their money was disposed of, Councillors would be more careful in disbursing their unearned (other people's) coin. Another year of such extravagant expenditure as 1859 would sink the Municipality into a state of hopeless bankruptcy. We applauded no small degree that direction from the man who occupied the Council of 1860.

PARLIAMENTARY.

The Session will probably close on Monday or Tuesday next.

During the past week the leading features of interest was the discussion of Mr Howard's resolutions on Constitutional Changes. Our Quebec correspondent gives a pretty full report of Mr Brown's speech. We ask for it a careful perusal.

The subject of the Queen's Printership was again debated, and the most flagrant jobbery was proved to have taken place in this department of the Government management, but the issue was evaded for the present, [likely for the session] by the appointment of another Committee.

A bill has been introduced to provide a fund for the support of superannuated government employees. It will be necessary for all government servants, in order to establish the fund, to contribute annually 2½ or 3 per cent of their whole income to the object, for 5 years.

The Homestead Bill has been thrown over for the session.

Mr McDougall has given notice of his intention to move for the abolition of the obnoxious Newspaper tax. The Hon. Postmaster General being absent in England is claimed by the Government as a reason why no further legislation on the postal system should take place this session. The resolution will be pressed, notwithstanding, and will probably be carried, unless the French maestros vote it down.

Messrs McGowan and McDougall have been successful in passing their "Bill for the prevention of corruption and bribery at Elections." It was opposed by the Ministry, but the Bill was carried over their heads, and the Attorney-General bound to accept the measure. It is to be hoped that it will prove a check upon the Alleyn-Fallowes election operations in future.

The Bill establishing Free Ports of Entry, has passed its second reading.

Government, Legislative Councillor for the Electoral Division of Sorel, having been unseated on the ground of disqualification, a writ has been issued for a new Election.

A writ has also been issued for a new election for East Middlesex, the constituency represented by the unfortunate M. Talbot, who was lost on the ill-fated Hungarian.

Several private bills passed their first stages.

☞ We fear that the lumber merchants will suffer severely this season from the fall in the river. We are assured that the water is two feet lower now than it has been at any similar period for a number of years.—The cribs are brought down with all possible speed, still there is a probability of a vast quantity of timber being left above this year.

☞ A Grand Soiree will be held at Pearson's Corners, Smith, on Thursday next, under the auspices of Division No. 87 Sons of Temperance. Several speakers of ability will address the meeting; excellent music will be in attendance, and a good time generally may be anticipated.

☞ The Council on Monday night agreed to increase the salary of the Clerk and Treasurer $100. This is only but right; we venture to say there is not a public official in the country who better earns his salary than the gentleman who now holds the office of Clerk and Treasurer of the Town of Peterboro.

TOWN COUNCIL.

MONDAY, May 7th, 1860.

The Council met. His Worship the Mayor presiding. Present—Messrs Morrow, Toole, Walton, O'Beirne, Chamberlen, Maloney, Ryan and Whyte.

Minutes read and confirmed.

The Mayor read a communication from Mr Wm Arnott, complaining of the state of the side-walk in front of his shop.

Mr O'Beirne considered the letter of Mr Arnott too disrespectful to be received by the Council, and moved, seconded by Mr Toole, that it be not received, which motion was agreed to.

The Fire Inspector handed in a Report recommending that the prayer of the petition of Mr Lemay be granted, and he be allowed to build his oven forthwith.

A communication from Constable Morrow claiming the sum of $100 offered as a reward for the apprehension of Dogherty, was read and referred to special committee already appointed on Mr Wilson's claim.

The Mayor stated that the Market Stalls had been offered for sale for the current year, and had all been disposed of but the one formerly used as a Lock-up.

Mr Morrow moved, seconded by Mr Toole,—That the Road and Bridge Committee be requested to put a crossing from the west side-walk on Water street to the side-walk on Murray street, and across Albert street; and to continue the side-walk up Murray street to John Hartley's corner.—Lost.

A petition from Alex Edmeston asking the Council to pay him $2.50 for work done on the streets last year, was referred to Finance Committee.

A motion to issue a check in favor of Mr Edmeston for his account was lost.

A petition from Mr J. R. Benson complaining that a claim for his services as Coroner, had been presented frequently for payment, but had been refused, was referred to Committee on Finance and Accountant.

The following report from the Finance Committee, was received and adopted:—

The Committee on Finance and Assessment beg to report as follows:—

That they have examined into the matters referred to in the application made by Mr. Clouston on behalf of the Board of School Trustees, and have ascertained that in the month of October, 1859, there was a By-law passed by the then Town Council for the purpose of providing the sum of £3500, which sum is stated and set forth therein, and on the minutes of the Council referring thereto, as the whole sum required by the Board of School Trustees. That the in so far as your Committee have been able to ascertain, is the sum of which Mr. Clouston claims a balance of £118. Your Committee, however, feel as referring the matter to the Treasurer, that this sum of £3500 has been already paid over to the Board. Your Committee, however, on examining further, ascertained that the sum required from the Town by the then Board to assist in building the School, was £2,-618 but they could not exactly find out why it was that the By-law was passed to raise the sum of £3 500 merely.

Your Committee discovered still further that debentures were issued under the said By-law, to the amount of £ , out of which the sum of £2,837 was realized in money, leaving a balance of £337 after paying over to the Board of School Trustees the sum of £3500, under the By-law. Your Committee have not been able to ascertain how this balance has been expended but they are satisfied there is some of it remaining.

Under the circumstances, your Committee regret that there are no funds to meet the demand; the more so as they consider it a demand which ought to be paid at once.

As to the application of the Clerk for an addition to his salary, your Committee do not consider $400 as salary adequate to the duties of the office, more especially as the labours have been lately increased, the Clerk having been lately instructed to keep the books and accounts more fully, and in detail, so that the exact state of the Town accounts, at any particular fund, can be at any time easily ascertained, on which account, much more of his time and attention will be required therefor.

Your Committee therefore recommend, that at the end of the year, the Clerk do receive the sum of $100 in addition to his salary, as fixed by the By-law, to sum to be paid out of the moneys to be provided for miscellaneous expenses.

The Chief Constable having applied for amount of arrears of salary, due up to the first of last April, you Committee find the amount due him by the Corporation to be $50 81 which will appear by the following statement:—

Amount of salary for 1859.....	$60 00
Salary for qr. ending 1st Ap. 1860	80 00
	$140 00
Deduct his due bill to the Corp'on	89 19
Balance.....	$50 81

Mr. Weller's account, your Committee believe to be correct, and would recommend for payment.

All of which is respectfully submitted,
CHAS. ORMOND,
JAS. RYAN,
IVAN O'BEIRNE,
EDMUND CHAMBERLEN.

Mr O'Beirne asked the Mayor why he had neglected to issue a landlord's warrant against Mr Scott for rent due on the portion of the Market Square, leased from the corporation, as he had been directed to do by resolution of the Council more than a month ago.

The Mayor answered that Mr Scott was a commissioner appointed by the late Council to superintend the building of a bridge over the Otonabee river at the north end of the Town and had been induced by promises of support from the Council to advance his own money to a large amount for the purpose, and that a suit had been instituted by Mr Scott to recover his advances from the town, which suit was yet untried, and until it was ascertained whether the corporation was bound to relieve Mr Scott, he, the Mayor would not issue his warrant for rent; as although it was a question whether in law the town is liable, there is no question but that it got the benefit of Mr Scott's advances; besides, the effect of a warrant would be merely to add to the costs of the suit, Mr Scott intending when it should issue to replevy and leave us where we are.

Mr O'Beirne moved, seconded by Mr Walton,—That Messrs Ormond, Morrow, and Chamberlen, be a Committee to examine into the state of the accounts between Mr. W A Scott and the Corporation, and Report to the Council at the next meeting what balance is due from Mr Scott.

Mr O'Beirne said he moved this motion because he thought the Mayor had no intention whatever of carrying out the motion passed by the Council, instructing him to proceed against Mr Scott for the balance of rent due.

The Mayor replied that it was well known to every person present that Mr Scott had a heavy claim against the Town, and that he [Mr Scott] was prepared to defend any action that might be brought against him by the Mayor; he thought it too hard that Mr Scott should be followed so closely for the comparatively small sum due by him for rent, while the Council refused to pay him [Scott] money he had expended on behalf of the Town. He [the Mayor] preferred a more pacific course than Mr O'Beirne recommended, and he did not feel inclined to risk the costs of a suit falling upon the Town, if it could be avoided. He thought it was very unbecoming, to say the least, in Mr O'Beirne, who was Mr Dennistoun's clerk, and Mr Dennistoun solicitor for the Town, to force the Town into law suits, and law costs. He [the Mayor] would not take proceedings against Mr Scott; if Mr O'Beirne, or the Council did, on their heads should rest the responsibility of it.

Mr O'Beirne wished to know distinctly, whether the Mayor intended to set the orders of the Council at defiance.

The Mayor said that when the Council ordered him to do what was right and proper he would do it; when otherwise he would not. And as to his warrant it would not be issued.

Mr O'Beirne said they would apply to the Queen's Bench for a mandamus to compel the Mayor to act. He also intimated that this would be the last year of Mr Sewers' Mayoralty.

To which the Mayor replied, that if the rate-payers were dissatisfied with him they would show it. But that nothing would induce him to use his office for a mean purpose; he hoped to give it to his successor, whoever that might be, in as honorable a condition as he got it.

Mr O'Beirne, in reply to the Mayor, said he was paid a salary by Mr Dennistoun; it didn't matter to him how many suits Mr D. had, or how much law business he transacted; that he was only doing what he conceived to be his duty to the rate-payers under the circumstances, and that it was unbecoming for the Mayor to make mention of such things as he had done. He further said that he was induced to move the resolution because he thought the Mayor neglected to perform some of the duties of his office.

The Mayor stated that if any neglect had taken place it was induced by the extremely foolish conduct of Mr O'Beirne and his associates in the Council of late; that it was not uncommon to appoint one of themselves Mayor pro. tem. when it answered their purpose; that a total disregard for law, for the rate-payers, for the Mayor, or for anybody else, had been shown by these gentlemen, but he was mistaken if the electors did not call them to judgment for their transgressions by-and-by.

Mr O'Beirne said he was contented that it should remain so, and that he was confident his course would be approved by the rate-payers.

The motion was then put and carried.

Mr Walton moved, seconded by Mr O'Beirne,—That the Chairman of the Finance Committee be instructed to call on Mr Cathcart, the Market Clerk, for the balance of rent due to the Corporation before the next meeting of the Council.—Carried.

The Mayor was instructed to take immediate steps against Mr Hopkins to return the Collector's Roll of 1859, if it was not surrendered before the next meeting of the Council.

A By-law naming W. Lunly, Esq., as Trustee of the Port Hope and Peterboro' Railroad, in the place of W. Clarton, Esq., resigned, was read a first time.

The Treasurer was instructed to pay Mr Cumming $50.81, being the bal nce due to him on account of salary.

The Council then adjourned till Monday night next, at 7½ o'clock.

Quebec Correspondence.

The great constitutional debate: Mr. Brown speaks nearly five hours: he shows that English Statesmen expected the Union Act would fail: proves that Upper Canada is sacrificed under it: she pays two-thirds of the revenues: he points out the remedies by giving to each section the control of its local Affairs the power of the general government to be liquified, &c., &c.

QUEBEC, MAY 2, 1860.

Mr. Brown spoke in support of the Convention resolutions on Monday evening, 30th April. His speech occupied four hours and forty minutes in its delivery. He commenced by admitting regret at being compelled to come to the conclusion that radical Constitutional changes were necessary, and admitted a great responsibility rested with those who proposed such changes. A majority of the people of Upper Canada were in favor of changes and the people of Lower Canada even admitted that something must be done. He might go back and blame the statesmen who had proved the acts of '75, '91 and 1840, but they had done what they and thought best at the time. They had, however, foreseen the difficulties that had now arisen under it. Burke had said that to unite the conquerors and the conquered must lead to anarchy. Mr. Brown then alluded to the condition of Lower Canada immediately before the Union when collisions had taken place between the Assembly and the other two branches. The result had been the rebellion, which he thought had resulted in good when Lord Durham had come to the country and examined into its circumstances. Here remedies were open to him to meet the difficulties—one the collection of the customs on a better plan, another the federature principle and lastly the system which was now in force which was intended to be a transcript of the British system. The Union Act was not passed unanimously, or in accordance with Lord Durham's wishes, he wanted the bill to contain provisions under which all the provinces of British America would come into a confederation, and he was opposed to giving an undue representation to the British over the French, he was in favor of representation by population, and of local governments. The House of Commons passed a resolution that there should be local legislatures, and a separate central body. Lord Durham advocated local legislatures, and a joint authority. During the debate in the Union act, the difficulties of preparing a constitution for Canada were admitted in England, Jos. Hume protested against the injustice of not giving Representation by Population. Sir R. Peel proposed that the Canadas should be divided into three parts, with a Council ruling over all, and hoped for the establishment of a confederation. Sir John Pakington thought likewise it would be wiser to divide Canada into three parts.—Mr. Gladstone did not anticipate any long duration of harmonious action. Mr. O'Connell objected to the Union Act, on account of the inequality of representation to numbers, Mr Ellice advocated two local governments and a general legislature, for general affairs. Mr. Buller thought that the power should be distributed, and not vested in one body. Lord Melbourne defended the bill, but only upon the ground of the difficulties of the two Provinces which were in a state of anarchy, Mr. Brown pointed to this fact to prove that British statesmen had enacted the bill to meet the troubles of the moment. The Duke of Wellington opposed the Union Act as unjust, and because the Provinces did not desire it, Lord Ellenborough thought that the affairs of so large a country as this should not be administered by one assembly; Lord Lansdowne said that it was highly probable that before ten years they would be called on to alter the constitution of Canada if the Provinces were united, Lord Ellenborough thought it would work injustice to Lower Canada at once, and to Upper Canada hereafter. Mr. Brown then went on to remark that the constitution as granted in 1840 was understood by the statesmen who were parties to it to be an experiment, but that some action had to be taken, although it had been expected more would be made for a change. He (Mr. Brown) always looked upon the Union as an experiment and was now satisfied that it was a failure. If there had been progress it had been in spite of the obstacles which the constitution imposed. While admiring the British constitution, he was satisfied it was not suited to a new country. In England the Queen never interfered in a positive manner as Lord Metcalfe and Sir Edmund Head had done in this country.

The change in the constitution of the Upper House had destroyed the British system. It would result in a collision between the two chambers; in fact such had already been the result. Practically the Provinces were still two, and we were no nearer consolidated than when the Union was concluded. Had the line of demarcation between the two Provinces been broken up, and an assimilation of the event taken place, there might have been a hope of maintaining the Union. As it was the legislation for the two sections was distinct still, the money appropriations were made on sectional grounds, and we were as far apart as ever. Mr Brown then alluded to the inequality of representation, and argued that the census returns for 1861 would show that Upper Canada had 250,000 greater population than Lower Canada which entitled her to 15 more members at least. He next proceeded to show that Upper Canada contributed 70 per cent of the general revenue. He claimed that all the goods entered at the ports of Upper Canada were consumed in that section, and that half the entries in Lower Canada were for parties in Upper Canada. The revenue had been contributed by the two sections in 1858 as follows:

CUSTOMS.

Upper Canada.....	$2,238,000
Lower Canada.....	1,043,000

EXCISE.

Upper Canada.....	$116,000
Lower Canada.....	63,000

TERRITORIAL.

Upper Canada.....	$256,000
Lower Canada.....	144,000

Of the Bank tax as well as postage tax Upper Canada had contributed three fourths. The whole general revenue had been contributed by the two sections in 1858 as follows:

Upper Canada.....	$3,727,000
Lower Canada.....	1,578,000

In six years the two sections had contributed the revenue in the following proportions:

Upper Canada.....	$21,236,179
Lower Canada.....	7,884,624

He went on to remark that the two Attorneys General had in their speeches admitted that Upper Canada paid two thirds of the revenue, and no matter how the money had been expended Upper Canada to-day had the burden, as the principal of the public debt remains unpaid, and Upper Canada pays every sixpence of the interest on it. Mr. Brown next proceeded to quote from the correspondence of Messrs Galt, Cartier and Ross with the Colonial Secretary, in which they had stated that changes were necessary. The ministry now sketched the difficulties they had admitted to exist. He was prepared to go into committee with the Attorney-General East to consider frankly from partisanship what was best to be done under the circumstances of the country. The hon. gentleman then alluded to the sectional [illegible] of the country. Upper Canada paid 70 per cent of the revenue and had no voice in determining the expenditure, or how it should be applied; ever since 1837 there had been a systematic and continuous majority against the government. He appealed to Lower Canadians whether they would not be clamorous were the case theirs. Lower Canada had once been governed by an Upper Canada majority but had kicked against it. The assaults against the Upper Canada school system came from Lower Canada, and this majority of Upper Canada was not permitted to control the legislation of that section. He charged the Attorney-General East with having stated to the Colonial Secretary when in England that he would oppose the annexation of the Hudson's Bay territory to Canada. (The Attorney-General did not deny the charge.) He then alluded to measures that had been [illegible] in the House although supported by a decided majority of Upper Canada representatives.—He instanced the Jury laws, the Divorce question, and the Fellowes case, as instances in point. The gentlemen on the Treasury benches did not represent a distinct party, they had been taken up while other members of the Government had been kicked out. No member of the Cabinet represented a constituency west of Cobourg. Although he desired that we should settle our own affairs, he confessed that we might be driven to appeal to the Imperial government if no remedy were applied. He pointed to the absence of any legislation for Upper Canada, and charged the government with ignoring public opinion in Upper Canada on the Homestead and Bankruptcy questions. The remedy for existing evils would not be found in a general confederation of the British American Provinces.—That step could only be taken when we were prepared to take upon ourselves the attributes of a nation. He thought the true remedy would be found in a dissolution of the Union and the establishment of two or more local governments. Upper as well as Lower Canada would then have the control of its local affairs. The central authority or general government of the two or more sections should have as few bodies as possible, which should be deferred by a written constitution. The public debt should be managed by the central government, which he thought should be met by a tariff on some more equitable principle than the present. The Crown Lands should be given up to the local governments. The Constitution should certainly provide that no new public works should be commenced, and that the debt should not be increased without the consent of the people. These points would, however be matters for consideration when the principle had been conceded. Such are some of the principal points alluded to by Mr. Brown, in his speech which was listened to with marked attention by the House and a number of spectators who remained in the gallery to the close. The Attorney-General East had been at a dinner given by Mr. Galt and having imbibed an unusual quantity of rum, he interrupted Mr. Brown at the commencement of his speech but was promptly rebuked by the Speaker.

[We received a second letter from our Correspondent last evening but we are obliged for want of space to leave it over till next week.—ED.]

PROBLEM No. 18.

A ferry boat was about to cross a river when it was upset by a party leaping on who increased the number of persons in the boat in the ratio, as 4 to 5. The number who got out without help (including the ferryman) was 5-6 of the increased number of passengers, and the number helped out was 1-3 of the number of minutes the last man was in the water. The numbers extricated in both ways in each of the first three minutes form a series of fractions whose numerators increase in arithmetical progression and denominators in geometrical progression, the common ratio and difference being the same as the number of persons in the water at the end of the three minutes, and the first numerator (with denominator unity) being the number of minutes remaining till the last man was out. Had however the number of intruders been less by four, and still preserved the number of passengers in the boat in the same ratio, the increased number of persons would have been twice (2) the common ratio of the geometrical progression. How long was the last man in the water?

PROBLEM NO. 19.

I am composed of 29 letters. My 1, 14, 27, 6 and 12 is a river in Northern Asia. My 7, 9, 16, 22, 12 and 13, the English racing champion. My 4, 5, 15, 23, 11 and 8, the land of the free and the home of the brave. My 10, 1, 28, 24 and 12 is one of the necessaries of life. My 26, 3, 25, 28, 15, 14, 21, 17, 29, 23, 11 and 18, a river in Southern Asia. My 7, 23, 2, 24, 19, 28, and 11, the patron saint of England.—My 20, 27 and 21 is a vain fellow. My whole essential to the prosperity of the Town of Peterborough.

PROBLEM No. 20.

A countrywoman carrying eggs to a garrison where she had three guards to pass, sold at the first half the number she had, and half an egg over; at the second the half of what remained, and half an egg more; and at the third the half of the remainder, and half an egg more. When she arrived at the market place she had three dozen eggs still to sell. How was it possible without breaking any of the eggs?

PROBLEM No. 21.

A man undertook a journey to be walked in three days—the first day 20 miles, the second day ⅓ his journey, and the third day ⅓ of it. Required, the length of the journey.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM 17.

By the 10th proposition of the 6th book of euclid, we can divide a straight line similarly to a given divided straight line, therefore we can take any number as one of the parts and the square root of five times the square of the part taken will be the other part. 2²=4 then the square root of 5 times 4=4.47213, then as the sum of the parts, or as 6.47213 : 2 1 : : 2 : 0.618033 = one of the parts, and 21—6.18033 = 14.81967 = the other part.

E. P. Fess.

SOLUTION TO No. 16.

(This problem is taken from Thompson's Irish Arithmetic.) Night equal to 7-7, twilight 2-7 of evening, morning ch. 2-7, and day equal to 3-7; therefore 13-7 equal 24 hours, and 1-7 equal 24-13. Now 24-13 added to 4 equal time of sunset, i. e. 5 1-13 hours, or 5 hours, 5 minutes, 9 9-13 seconds.

Ed. Rotherham, Hope.

Mr. Rothwell contends that problem No. 14 can be answered. As there is an issue on this point it would be well for Mr. R. to send a rule.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Mr. Editor,—I am a friend to your correspondent "Zero," though the name he has assumed is associated with a feeling of shivering. Nevertheless, I am in general coincide with him in his views as far as concerned on Education. Education like other questions requires a thought and experiment in order to arrive at sound conclusions in reference to its practical operation in society. I can easily suppose two individuals each taking one of the two modes of instruction under consideration, and each making out a very good case. The free system so much eulogized by the Bombays of Dr. Ryerson, is no, where to be found in his new School Bill. As to the compulsory part of the free system; it is forgotten. And here I am reminded of the clever dodging of our Chief Superintendent, when he pretended to hold his "Teachers Institute" in this Town. You would have supposed the chief object of his visit was to press upon the people free education for all, and compulsory attendance at school by all. Probably no one place so much taken up with Victoria College and Toronto University that it slipped from his memory. Beyond a few second-rate, the Common Schools remain as they were.—The religious element is to be more marked however, and we soon shall have every sect educating its own children, as he wants each Sectarian College to educate its young men.

I think your correspondent if he will take the ber. The Cardinal Vicaire, however to whom she applied, is a great friend of the Jesuits, and of course refused her request. He told her that a step had been taken which could never be revoked: that the child had been dedicated to the service of the Lord; and doubtless rebuked the poor woman for being so overcome by such a selfish maternal affection. At all events, her case is a hopeless one; for there is no law here higher than that which justifies the injustice.

Edinburgh Correspondence

OF THE "EXAMINER."

EDINBURGH, Scotland, April 20, 1860.

I now commence my monthly letter regarding the general aspect of Religious affairs both in Great Britain and the Continent, which I hope will prove interesting to your readers generally.

ENGLAND.

DR. WATTS.—A statue of Dr. Isaac Watts—a noted non-conformist—is in progress, by Mr Lucas the Sculptor: the place of its destination being Southampton, the Dr's. native town. £400 is already subscribed, leaving £200 to be subscribed by the public. The ceremonial of erection will take place next fall.

SPECIAL SERVICES.—The Britannia and other theatres in London, are now being occupied each Sabbath evening for religious worship, conducted by various ministers.—The propriety of which is very questionable. The money received by the proprietors of the theatres undoubtedly is employed by them to keep the buildings open for the week day play or pantomime, and thus tends to pedantize on the one hand, what is designed to discourage on the other. In this "evil is done that good may come." This is a day of progress in the arts, &c., but as regards its being a day of genuine religious progress, it is doubtful.

PARLIAMENTARY.—The motion for a commission to enquire into the State grant to the College of Maynooth, annually made by Mr Spooner, has been this year lost by a considerable majority. During the discussion on the motion, a Romish member of the House of Commons, declared that his determination would at once relinquish this endowment as soon as the Regium Donum was one to the Presbyterians in Ireland, and the tythes given to the Prelatic Clergy in Ireland were given up. I fear it will be long before State-paid ministers will come to these terms. Advancing money to State-ish Institutions out of the public purse, has been the hope of Britain; and I see from Late Advices that the Methodists in Canada West are engaged in trying to get the "merciful" for their College (or rather Academy,) I sincerely wish them haters of "filthy lucre" will be disappointed.

SCOTLAND.

The Cardross case here still occupies a considerable measure of public attention. The Commission of the Free Church Assembly which met in February, unanimously agreed to obey the order of the Court of Session, in laying before the judges the sentence, and the grounds for it: but under protest that they would not surrender the point of reversing the sentence.

IRISH REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN MISSION TO THE JEWS IN LONDON.—The zealous and learned agent of this Society J. Cunningham, D.D. L.L.D., a pious and learned Scotchman, and author of "Presbyterianism vindicated," "Arminianism unmasked," &c., &c., still continues his attention towards the "seed of Abraham," living in that great city. The following extract from the journal, as published in the Missionary Observer, for March 1860, I think will prove interesting to the generality of your readers:—"July 30th; 1859,—Besides conversing with many individuals, addressed two crowds. The first of these was assembled in the middle of White's row, Spitalfields. The main speaker here opposed to me was Calne of the Secularist Hall. (The Secularists are infidels of the Athiest class.) He conducted himself like an Orator, and successive speeches were delivered. In his first speech, among other things, he embodied the following errors:—That Christians taught that God is changeable, and there was no observance of the Christian Sabbath, till it was decreed by the Council of Nice. I gave in reply a sketch of the customs of Christians in keeping the Lord's Day, during the Apostles days, mentioning the designation given to it in the Book of Revelation, as if it was then well known; and pointed out the wide extent of the knowledge of Christ, and of the sufferings of Christians for His name sake, had reached before the middle of the 2nd century; concluded by saying that the charge that Christians represent God as changeable is not true. He replied, by saying, that the death of the cross was a Jewish punishment adopted from the heathen; that the passage respecting Jesus in "Whiston's Josephus" is an interpolation; and that there is no mention made, either of the Christian Sabbath or of Christ, by any heathen writer for the first three hundred years of this era. In reply to those things, I said, crucifixion was the death of a Roman Slave, convicted of a capital crime, and not adopted by the Jews; that much is not gained or lost to Christianity, and as regards Josephus he was no more that an Ebionite Christian, if any at all. But that there is abundant mention made of the name and reputed character of the Lord Jesus in the writings of heathen who flourished in the first three centuries, including the celebrated letter of the Governor Pliny, Governor of Bithynia, to the Emperor Trajan. He candidly confessed this letter to be something in history which he had never read, and preferred to discuss with me again some other time. The second assembly was held at the end of Rose Lane, without a text, to which I made remarks on the blessings of the new Covenant, which are by promise; and on this covenant as confirmed by the death of the Mediator. An English Jew, well-dressed made himself remarkable by his ignorance, and scoffing words and questions. To-day (a number of Jews on my way to London Bridge, for Greenwich."

FRANCE.

In the Foreign Missionary we find the following from the Secretary of "The Evangelical Society," "Our Society, as you well know, is an aggressive Society, the chief object being the Evangelization of Roman Catholics. We have now under our direction 33 agents, Assistants of Pastors, Evangelists and Teachers. The demand for labour, is increasing, and in many of the departments to which only a few years ago, the Romish Protestant existed, it does not exist, although, as will as elsewhere and always, we have to oppose but our opposite bear witness. An Edict was, our Society lately opened in the Province, the region of the Pyrenees party. Its time was very stormy, but we have every reason to the contrary the decree has not been withdrawn."

PARIS.—The following extract from a letter to the present of the Central Society of Evangelization in Paris will show how we are progressing in the work of Evangelization. Our progress has been steady, and our operations have increased nearly 100 fold in 13 years! We have also a preparatory school of theology, which is under the direction of Pastor Bonnet and two other professors. Our students of Theology are 16 in number."—From another we learn, "That the Bible Societies of Paris, Strasburg, &c., circulate each year about 14 000 copies of the Bible; and the French and Foreign Bible Societies issue per year, are about 70,000 copies, art to speak of hundreds of copies of Bunyan's "Pilgrim," and Erskine's "Gospel and Sonnets."

ANGERS.—From the Baptist Evangelist, London, a Calvinist Magazine of the "Old School," we learn, "That M Robineau was pastor of the Reformed Church in Angers, until his views on Baptism underwent a decided change. The consistory of Nantes then ejected him from his house of worship and from the ministry; twelve of his hearers with four Romanists were baptised, who formed themselves into a Baptist Church of which he is pastor."

ITALY.

A correspondent of the Unionist speaks thus of Italy: "The political features of the Papacy have become so odious in Italy as to give Protestantism a decided advantage; and here in Tuscany, the dissenters are organizing for the diffusion of their doctrines, which are those of Vaudism of Piedmont. They number, I understand, about nine thousand of the native population, and several large and truly respectable churches have been organized and whose sentiments on religion are those of the Dort and Westminister School of Theology. Bibles and Tracts are industriously and freely circulated." To the above we subjoin the following from a correspondent of one of the daily journals: "I am surprised at the number of Italians I meet who frankly declare that they have not a particle of respect for the authority of the Church in which they were born. Some of them go such lengths in their denunciations, that one who wishes to be governed by principles of fairness, is obliged to warn them not to exceed the bounds of moderation."

PROTESTANTISM IN ITALY.—The Turin correspondent of the Original Secelers Magazine, speaks thus of the progress of truth in benighted Italy:—"Present events in Italy have given a great impetus to the progress of Protestantism in Italy. While politicians are doing the work of destruction upon the Papal fabric, the Evangelist follows the liberator, or even precedes him, in spite of confiscation, imprisonment, or even death, grading itself of the facilities afforded by the Papal Power, the work of Evangelism in the Northern and Central parts of Italy is rapidly advancing. The first element of Protestantism, in opposition to the Romanist corruptions and oppressions, has long existed in Italy; its second element—that of affirming and building up a purer system, has now commenced." God speed the laborers in this interesting vineyard.

INDIA.

From recent letters from Messrs. Smith of Delhi, and Gregson of Agra, we learn that an eager spirit of hearing the word of God is manifested by the people inhabiting those parts of where the mutiny was most formidable and its atrocities the most revolting and cruel. On the spots where the martyr's blood was shed, the missionary now has his largest and most attentive congregations."

Latest from Europe,

BY THE "CANADA."

Archduke Albert has resigned his office of Civil and Military Governor of Hungary General Benedeck is his successor. This appointment will be very popular in Hungary.

Victor Emmanuel arrived at Florence on the 16th. His reception was most enthusiastic.

The Pope has appointed Monsignor Count Merode, of Belgium, Minister of War, which ministry was provisionally directed by Cardinal Antonelli.

Palermo is tranquil.

The members of a revolutionary committee among whom are several eminent persons, have been condemned to death. The King has ordered their execution to be delayed. At Messina tranquility is restored. Several young men compromised in the late events have fled the country. The emigration of the inhabitants is considerable.

Cardinal Antonelli has addressed a letter to all the foreign representatives accredited to the Papal Court, protesting against the incorporation of the Legations with Piedmont. The protest concludes with the hope that the Powers of Europe will not only refuse to recognize this annexation, but cooperate to put an end to "this iniquitous spoliation."

The Porte has resolved to resist the demands of the Servians, and is about to concentrate 30,000 men at Schumla.

A great sensation has been produced in Paris by the publication of a pamphlet, entitled "La Coalition." The Monitour acknowledging that the tendency of the production is to maintain a feeling of uneasiness in the public mind, says—"The law does not give to Government a right to stop the publication of a pamphlet containing no particularised offence, but the Minister of the Interior has brought under the notice of the Minister of Justice the Bourse manœuvres on the occasion of the publication of the pamphlet 'La Coalition,' and a judicial inquiry will be held." The object of the work is to show that it is impossible at the present day for England to form any alliance, that France can do as she likes, that the only "Coalition" practicable, is a coalition of peoples under the protection of France, and that the French frontier must be extended to its "natural limits" on the sole of the Rhine. We subjoin a few extracts to give an idea of the dithesis with which the pamphlet is written:—

"Ah! we are far from Waterloo! We are not now exhausted and ruined by 20 years of heroic war. We have taken advantage of the 20 years' peace which Providence has given us to recruit our forces and stimulate our patriotism. Our African wars have employed the leisure of the most valiant army in Europe, and have trained it to victory. We have rifles which carry far and true, and rifled cannons which can sweep from a citadel to miles off. We have an army of 600,000 men; and if our frontiers were threatened there would be in France as many soldiers as Frenchmen."

"We can also fight at sea. We have built gigantic ships, cased with iron, and studded with triple rows of guns; we have gun-boats; in short, we have a powerful navy, which formerly we said not."

"England is only predominant through her money, but there are three or four Powers in Europe who, if they would combine, might hold all the British fleets in check. Let France ally herself with Russia and Germany, and England would be shut out of the Northern and Black Sea. Let her enlist Spain and Portugal to join this alliance, and that is Russia and the Mediterranean will no longer exist for the English. Their isle of Malta and their Gibraltar will soon be but the dreams of disappointed ambition—the ruins of a proud dominion."

"Let Russia take Constantinople, and France establish herself in Alexandria, while generously opening the Indies by way of the Isthmus of Suez to all Europe; let Austria retire gradually from Italy, and strengthen herself on the Danube; then England will be conquered, and the balance of power adjusted in Europe."

"There then would be no objection to Prussia obtaining in the Germanic Confederation that preponderence which is the object of her eternal ambition, and realising the Germany that she dreamt of in 1848. It is of little consequence to France, that a German empire should be formed on her eastern frontier, provided that her frontiers on the Rhine shall be so well guaranteed as they now are on the side of the Alps. Let France regain her natural frontiers, and she will have nothing to fear."

DEFALCATION OF A BANK CASHIER IN £263,000 STERLING.

THE GREAT FIGHT.

FARTHER POINT, May 6, 4 p. m., The steamer Bohemian arrived at 4 p. m., on the 6th. She bring 386 passengers.

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Lords, on the 23rd ult., the Marquis of Normandy brought forward a resolution comprising of secret correspondence having been carried on between Lord Cowley, the British Ambassador at Paris, and the Home Government, with reference to important matters in relation to the Savoy question, and declaring it injurious to the public service to have questions of moment referred to in a private correspondence, unless there was also a public record of the same.

Lord Cowley stated that he regarded the motion as a censure upon himself, and had come from Paris expressly to defend his course. He asserted that his first information relative to the intentions of France was received privately and as a matter of opinion from Count Walewki, and that the communication was of such a nature that he was unable to include it in a public despatch. The first official intimation he had was in February last, and he then forthwith laid it before the Government. He denied that any communication of importance had been withheld.

The Marquis of Normandy finally withdrew his resolution.

The London Times, in an editorial upon Mr. Haliburton's speech in the House of Commons on behalf of the timber trade of Canada, censures the cavalier manner in which Mr. Gladstone replied, and asserts that the English public is no party to such treatment, which it thinks must prove very offensive to the Colony.

The weather throughout England continued cold and wintry. The spring is very backward, and gives some little anxiety regarding agricultural prospects.

The steamer Connaught, for the Galway line, was successfully launched at Newcastle on the 21st April.

Sir G. Clark is gazetted Governor of Bombay.

The volunteer force now reaches 124,000 men.

In the House of Commons the debate upon the Reform Bill was resumed, but without action, the discussion being adjourned till the 26th. Mr. Massey announced that he would not persist in the motion for referring the bill to a select committee.

The proceedings in both Houses on the 24th were unimportant.

The fraud committed by W. G. Pullinger, chief cashier of the Union Bank, London, amount to the enormous sum of £263,000, nearly one and a quarter million of dollars, which places him at the head of this class of defaulters in London. The entire loss will be met from the bank's profit.

The Earl of St. German's, Lord Steward of the Queen's household, goes to Canada in the retinue of the Prince of Wales.

Lieut. Col. Dreslock is to be military secretary to Lord Elgin, on his mission to China.

Lord Elgin was to leave London on the 26th April for China.

It is stated that £170,000 had been paid from Lloyd's on the ship and cargo of the steamer Hungarian.

A report that Heenan had died of erysipelas proved to be utterly unfounded.

Heenan, on the 32nd, writes to the London Times:—I see by your article of Saturday that you misunderstand my wishes, and it does me great injustice. I have no difference to settle with Sayers except such as I tried to settle with him on the 16th; and instead of being called a boy, I ought to be termed a baby if, after having come so far and not having got a settlement, I should be willing to relinquish my purpose for a few good-natured pats on the back, and being told I am a fine fellow.

I have received a great many anonymous letters asking if I am not ashamed of myself, a great fellow like me to come over to whip a little man like Sayers. Under ordinary circumstances I should not think of sending a challenge to a man of Sayers' size, but England thinks him big enough to defend the belt. I want it, and cannot get it except through him.

The enclosed letter which I sent to Bell's Life, when I heard that they intended to call in the surgeon to name the day, before which Sayers could not finish the pending affair, will show my position, and as Bell's Life has not published it, you will do me a great kindness by letting the English people hear what I have to say. If the late battle is not to be renewed, and the belt is not to come to me, for what has already taken place, I claim to be first on the list to meet Sayers again for the next chance to conquer it.

The following is the letter to Bell's Life:

"Not having been able to obtain from you as referee, the final decision upon the fight of Tuesday last, I desire to demand through you a new meeting within the present week. I make the demand from having been informed that it has been suggested on your part that I should give Sayers sufficient time to recover from certain injuries received by him. Now, Sir, while I am willing to accommodate him in any proper way, I must not be committed of my own right. I also received injuries, but I bargained for them, and I put it down to you as a man of honour whether if I had been deprived through the effect of the said fight of my eye-sight, or the use of my arm, as in the case of Brettle, when disabled by Sayers you would have made Sayers wait for me for any length of time that might be dictated by my private doctor?

"When these matches were made, the date of the battle was the 16th, or as soon as we could get to fight; and according to the rules, if the battle should be interrupted in any manner whatever, and I believe it is the law, that we should fight within the week. We did accept Sayers' offer to contest; the battle is said to be unfinished; I am prepared to receive it at any moment within lawful limits. If Sayers is not able to account of injuries received from me, he cannot meet me according to the rules of manly opposition, I demand and claim that he resign to me the belt, which he is not according to the rules of the prize ring, entitled to retain.

Hoping to receive an answer from you before the week expires, stating your views in full, I am, &c., &c.

P. S.—You will please understand, I don't wish to compel Sayers to fight because he is represented to be in a disabled state, but I wish to obtain what I think I have already won, and which I will cheerfully hand back whenever he or any other person thinks he can take it from me."

Two hundred pounds are said to have been subscribed in Liverpool, by American captains, for the benefit of Heenan.

FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of the Times, says that crime is fearfully increasing in Paris, and that a frightful number of murders have been committed during the past few months.

The editor of a Saturday journal at Turin has been condemned to two months' imprisonment and a fine for publishing disgraceful articles against the Emperor of the French.

GOSSIP FROM ROME.

The Post's correspondent at Rome, writing on the 7th inst., sends some curious little facts as to the appointment of General Lamoriciere:

The probability of the Pope's preserving the remaining portion of his dominions, and the Eternal City itself, after the departure of the French troops, is considered to be increased by the appointment of General de Lamoriciere to the supreme command of his Holiness' forces. The General's nomination, which was signed by the Pope on Monday last, was no sooner made known to the French Ambassador than he communicated to Cardinal Antonelli that such a proceeding, without the previous knowledge and consent of the Emperor Napoleon was, to say the least of it, extremely premature, and that unless the appointment was cancelled, and a telegraphic despatch forwarded to the Emperor to know his pleasure on the subject, he, the ambassador, should consider it his duty to haul down his flag, and suspend further diplomatic relations. This energetic protest occasioned some consternation at the Vatican, his Holiness declaring that the affair had gone too far, as he had already signed the appointment; but the Duke of Grammont's attitude was too imposing to admit of any trifling, and consequently his demands were complied with, and the necessary missive despatches to Paris. The ambassador soothed the apprehensions of the Government by stating his opinion that no obstacle would be raised by his Imperial master, but he dwelt upon the absolute necessity of his approbation being obtained before reinstating General de Lamoriciere. The reply to the telegraphic question was, as the ambassador expected, favourable. At any rate, it was not unfavourable; and, consequently General de Lamoriciere is once more the official champion of the church. His functions are limited to the duties of commander-in-chief, the portfolio of war not having been entrusted to him, and no doubt he will find sufficient occupation in the re-organization of the Papal army. The numerical strength of this force, comprising the gendarmerie, amounts to about 17,000 men; but the general's ideas are much more vast and to bring up the army to the strength of forty thousand men, as he suggests a conscription—a measure as yet unknown in the State of the Church—will be required unless the promised force of stalwart pilgrims, none of whom have yet made their appearance, should prove far more numerous than is likely. Meanwhile the General has set actively to work. Foreign engineers have been telegraphed for, and foreign material ordered, with a profusion that will be a staggering blow to the diminishing revenue of the Papal Government; and it remains to be seen how far the annual expenditure required for the war department under the new system will be compatible with the resources of the state. The general is known to be a thorough soldier and a strict disciplinarian, and the Roman officers look forward with some dismay to the unaccustomed ordeal to which the new commander-in-chief will submit them. The general's urgent demands for an aide-de-camp were at first a source of some embarrassment to his Holiness, but Major Giraud, who has been for many years in the War Office, was finally placed at the general's disposition. If all goes on smoothly, it is surmised that for some time longer the Papal sway will be maintained in the territory at present acknowledging it; and probably Napoleon himself would be opposed to any further aggrandizement of Victor Emmanuel, as a case of unforseen events leading to an invasion of La Marca by the Piedmontese troops; but it is not probable on the other hands, that the new confident expectations of the ecclesiastical party will be so far realised as to give Europe the spectacle of De Lamoriciere's victorious troops once more unfurling the Papal banner at Bologna in the course of the ensuing summer. The Holy Week ceremonies have been quite numerously attended to render the sight of his Holiness washing the apostles' feet, and subsequently serving them at dinner, an affair of nearly as much difficulty as usual to sight-seeing foreigners. Few visitors of distinction have arrived in Rome for Easter, except the Grand Duchess Mary of Russia.

ARE MORE LAWYERS WANTED IN PARLIAMENT.

* * * * * The fact is undoubted that, whether rightly or wrongly, public sentiment has at that the country does not require the assistance of any greater number of gentlemen of the legal profession in the Legislature. It is argued that three-fourths of the Parliament, from the Speaker downwards, is composed of lawyers, and that the legislation naturally smacks of the ideas peculiar to the class to which we allude. Supposing that instead of lawyers, three-fourths of the representatives were tailors, tanners, or manufacturers, would it not be natural that the laws would favor the particular class which was so largely in the ascendant? No one would wonder at it, and the cause would be at once apparent, and the defect remedied. Without wishing to underrate the legal profession or to argue that its members are worse than other men (for we know them think them to be—still, we fancy do them that credit to believe that they are liable to the weaknesses common to humanity, which induces people to look out for themselves.

Take the case of the Court of Chancery for example. There is an institution ingeniously framed so as to squander the utmost farthing out of the unfortunate suitor, and by means of a multiplicity of forms, references, and orders, recommended, of course by an unanswerable array of fees, the individual who has the ill-luck to be forced into a suit in that Court, patiently finds himself at the termination of a considerable time, even though he gain the cause. In many cases, when the property in question is but large, the entire estate is absorbed in the costs of the suit, in which case both the litigants are losers, the only gainers being the professional agents. Such cases remind one of the fable of the lion and the bear who quarrelled over the carcase of an animal that had been killed, when the fox came up and ran away with it altogether.

The Court is not a common sense Court. No man nor a lawyer could have had the perverse ingenuity to have invented so complex, irritating, and expensive a method of bleeding the people, and, be it remembered, legal phlebotomy is the most severe in any practice. Were the Courts to be devised by commercial, practicable men, they would be peoples' Courts, suggested by their necessities, adapted to their requirements, and suited to their means. But, naturally enough, as the lawyers are so greatly in the ascendant in the Legislature, the reverse of all this is the case, and the existing legal system is overborne with expenses and complications ruinous to the suitor, but admirably adapted to the pecuniary requirements of the legal profession—Free Press.

—The ministerial journals are incessantly talking about differences among the Opposition. They would do better to attend to the dissentions in their own ranks. The Conservatives and Hincksites are quarrelling like cat and dog. The Leader denounces Mr. Becher because he is a Conservative, and the Colonist pitches into its confrere with a heaviness which indicates a lively time when the alliance of the two classes of Sepoys is broken up.—Globe.

NEW YORK, May 4.—The acting Mayor last night sent a message to the Board of Aldermen stating that he had received information that the steamship Great Eastern will make her first voyage to this port.

—It is currently reported says the Quebec Chronicle, of Friday, that Mr. Sheridan Hogan the missing M.P.P. has turned up in Liverpool. We do not vouch for the accuracy of the repot.

—There was a great fire at Woodstock, New Brunswick, on the 20th ult, supposed to be the act of an incendiary. About 150 houses and stores were destroyed in the town. Among the buildings are two banks, the town hall, post-office and several hotels.

—The writ for the holding of an election in East Middlesex has been received by the Sheriff The election will consequently take take place towards the latter end of the present month.

THE [illegible] CANADA PROVINCIAL EXHIBITION.

We learn that permanent grounds have at length been secured within the city limits of Hamilton, and that a large and convenient Exhibition Building, that will have no inconsiderable amount of architectural and picturesque beauty, is about to be commenced forthwith. The site selected is the [illegible] and upon the occasion of the Exhibition when last held [illegible] they could admirably situated, and commands extensive and beautiful views. The area will compromise, we understand, upwards of 15 acres. The City Corporation, aided we presume, by grants from the County Council and Agricultural Societies, have undertaken the erection and perpetuation.

The precise time of holding the Exhibition is not yet determined. As there is a high degree of probability that his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales [illegible] will be in this section of the Province in Sept. the Board of Directors will endeavour to arrange the time, so as to meet that event [illegible]

[illegible] favorable locality for getting up a large exhibition, both of visitors and materials, and from the known enterprising and liberal character of its citizens we may safely conclude that nothing will be wanting that may tend to make [illegible] agreeable. We trust that our farmers, mechanics, and all classes of contributors, will nobly exert themselves to show the foreign visitors of our Empire, the results of their skill and industry, and the numerous surprising performances, comparatively undeveloped though they be, of this extensive Province. A Grand Exhibition has been determined on at Montreal, which must mainly consist of manufacturing, mechanical and artistic productions, and to which the Government have recommended a grant of $20,000. We hope that our Upper Canada mechanics and manufacturers will do what they can to send contributions to Montreal. And let us in Upper Canada show the Prince what we can do in Agriculture and the Stock line. The Government will no doubt render assistance worthy the occasion. We trust, therefore, that all the Agricultural Societies, Mechanics' Institutes, manufacturers and in short every influential individual who has the honor and welfare of his country at heart, will at once set about [illegible] effective operation in their respective localities, with a view of making their best annual gathering in September far to surpass any thing that has gone before.—Not a day should be lost in preparing for this great national event, throughout the country. Such another opportunity cannot again occur for very many years, and we must do all we can united as one man, to make the most of it.

It is with pleasure we know that the financial condition of the Province is so far improved that the Government has felt itself justified in recommending to Parliament the [illegible] allowed by the law to Agricultural Societies for the present year, placing them upon the same footing as in 1858. This information will be received with unmingled satisfaction throughout the whole extent of the Province.—Canadian Agriculturist.

ATTEND TO YOUR POULTRY.

The New England Farmer says:

"Neglected Poultry is propably sheltered and fed, (though seldom) by the exception to the rule of a shed and [illegible] Want of proper food, irregular feeding, too many occupying a [illegible] to cold, with more than [illegible] exposure to wet, are the prolific sources of disease in the poultry-yard. We believe that exposure to wet and cold is the principal cause of loss of the young of all kinds of domestic fowls, including chickens. Nearly the whole annual catalogue of diseases—the pip or gapes, diarrhœa, indigestion, asthma, fever, consumption, moping, rheumatism, roup and vermin may be traced to this. We have that 50 chickens in a single storm where wind and rain found their way to broods which we supposed were very safe."

An excellent food for horses may be obtained by sowing a mixture of one bushel of barley, one bushel of oats, and half a bushel of peas. If the ground is rich an immense crop is obtained. It should be cut when the barley is ripe, which will be before the oats. They may be thrashed and the grain fed to horses, or what is much better, cut up the straw and grain together with a hay cutting machine. This feed is much relished by horses, and we know of no way in which Horses can be wintered so economically.

A GREAT LAYER.

The Renfrew Journal says: "A duck under the ordinary name, belonging to Mr. Hay, Mill of Logan, in this district, has this season disposed an egg every day for 140 days in succession. The useful little animal was hatched from the egg of a wild duck, and laid an enormous number of eggs last year. Might it not add to the profits of the poultry yard, if similar experiments in breeding were oftener tried?"

SOOT AS A MANURE.

Soot is used in England to considerable extent as a manure for wheat. It contains much ammonia, and Cunningwait attributes its high fertilizing effect to this ingredient. The experiments of the late Professor Anderson showed soot to be a valuable manure for wheat, for timothy, and for the other grasses, while it had no good effect on clover.

MILK REGULARLY.

Cows should be milked at regular intervals of 12 hours, as near as possible, especially during the hot sun mer months. Cows thus fed should in the morning and evening, choosing in rest in the cool shade through the middle of the day; hence they should be milked and turned out before sunrise.

HINTS ON POTATOES.

A correspondent of the Boston Cultivator, has experimented with potash on potatoes, and he says: "On some thousands of rattails this decreased the yield, and the potatoes where ashes were used were blighted, scabby and not to be marketable.

$100 A YEAR,

AND upwards save to the Farmers, by Aldus Mowry's

CHOP GRINDER.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known or in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 10 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are so fitted into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without altering or adjusting the Machine.

PRICE $50.

All orders directed to "M. Mowry, Ashburnham, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.

FISHER'S HOTEL.

AMOS J. FISHER

BEGS to acquaint the inhabitants of Peterborough, Town and County, that he has recently opened a Hotel on Hunter street, adjoining the stand of the

OLD "FISHER'S HOTEL,"

where he is prepared to attend to those who may favor him with their patronage. The building has at a great expense been fitted up for

A FIRST-CLASS HOUSE

and every attention will be paid to the wants of the resident and transient public. There are on the premises good sheds and a commodious stable, open daily, and free of charge. There will be a careful Hostler in attendance, and parties may rely upon it that the best attention will be paid to horses and conveyances entrusted to his charge, and no fee required. A limited number of may find comfortable accomodations. The Bar will be furnished with the choicest Wines and Spiritous and Malt Liquors.

The Farming Community are particularly requested to give him a call,

Remember the place—Fisher's Old Stand,

PHONOGRAPHY,
OR WRITING BY SOUND!!

PHONOGRAPHY was invented by ISAAC PITMAN, of Bath, England, in the year 1837. It is the most simple, most natural, most rapid, and most easily learned system of writing which has ever been, or ever can be invented.

During the past fifteen years, hundreds of thousands of persons, in England and America, in both public and private life, have learned to write Phonography, and thousands of useful and business letters annually pass through the post office.

Nor is the great popularity to be wondered at. The present system of writing is exceedingly cumbersome, and totally unworthy these days of progress and invention. Phonography is regular, is legible, can be learned in one twentieth the time, and can be written six times as fast! In other words, the labor of six days can be performed in one.

So simple is the system, too, that a person may learn to write it slowly, in a couple of hours. An hour's daily practice for a few weeks will enable any person to write Phonography with certainty, and with some degree of freedom. The same amount of practice continued for six months will enable a person to take reports of speeches lectures, sermons, or conversation, and to read them with accuracy.

The late Hon. Thos. H. Benton, upon being presented with a verbatim report of one of his masterly speeches, taken by a little boy only twelve years of age, said: "Had this art been known 40 years ago it would have saved me 20 years hard labor." The learned senator spoke but a portion of the truth. What long-hand requires six years to accomplish, Phonography will perform in one.

To clergymen, Editors, Physicians, Lawyers, Secretaries, Conveyancers, Law and Medical Students, Lecturers, Printers, School Teachers, Merchants, School Boys and Girls, a knowledge of Phonography is of vast utility. In fact there is no profession or calling in which it is not useful, and no young man's education can be considered complete without it.

During the past 9 months hundreds of persons in Canada, of every pursuit in life, have acquired the Art, from many of whom the subscriber has received newly-written phonographic letters, expressive of their delight with the attainment, and the extraordinary ease with which they have acquired it.

For the purpose of aiding in the dissemination of so important a reform in his own country, the subscriber is now prepared to supply all who apply, with the MANUAL OF PHONOGRAPHY, and the PHONOGRAPHIC COPY BOOK, sent by mail to any part of the Province, postage pre-paid, for the small sum of ONE DOLLAR.

Anybody and everybody who can learn anything, can learn PHONOGRAPHY from the MANUAL without other assistance. Those who wish to be able to put their thoughts to paper at the rate of from 100 to 250 words per minute, should send for the above-mentioned works at once. The instruction given by the Manual is as plain as A. B. C., and ten times as easy to understand.

☞ "THE CANADIAN PHONETIC PIONEER" Is a Monthly Journal, devoted to the advocacy of the Reform. Price 25 cents per annum.

PEALE'S
COURT OF DEATH.

The subscriber is now issuing 100,000 Splendid Coloured Engravings

Of Rembrandt Peale's celebrated Original Painting of the Court of Death.

at the unprecedentedly low price of

☞ ONE DOLLAR EACH.☜

☞The lowest regular price for engravings of the size and quality of this is $5; and in answer to the question "how can they be sold for One Dollar?" the subscriber would state, that instead of issuing 5,000 copies at $1, he issues 100,000 copies at $1. The main expense of such a work is not in the paper and printing, but in getting up the plates. If 5,000 only are sold, $5 is but a fair price. But if 100,000 are sold at $1, the aggregate profits are larger than on the 5,000.

The Original Painting, of which the Engravings are a fac-simile Copy, was painted by Rembrandt Peale, in the City of Baltimore, in 1820, and has been the study and admiration of tens of thousands of our citizens. It has long been valued at 25,000 Dollars.

Death is personified as a King or Monarch, and there is not a skeleton or anything repulsive in the picture.

There are twenty-three full sized figures in the engravings, and arranged into five groups presenting living representations of DEATH, WAR, MENTAL PLEASURE, INTEMPERANCE, and the TERRORS OF CHRISTIAN FAITH OVER THE TERRORS OF DEATH.

It is a work to DELIGHT THE EYE and IMPROVE THE HEART. It can be studied and understood by a child, while its sublime conception affords scope to the strongest imagination.

It has been made the subject of special discourse, by Rev. Dr. Sprague, Rev. Dr. Welch, Rev. Dr. Bacon, Rev. Dr. Cleveland, Rev. Dr. Wayland, and others.

A more impressive, instructive, or beautiful Parlor Ornament could not be purchased.

By enclosing $7 ONE DOLLAR and five letter stamps [to pay postage,] the Engraving will be forwarded, postpaid, rolled in a strong case.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS supplied at a liberal discount.

CLERGYMEN can add at least fifty dollars per year to their income [in commission] by interesting themselves in the distribution, and at the same time place in the hands of each subscriber, [what President Hale calls] "a sermon on canvas."

Any person sending $5, shall receive a sixth copy gratis postpaid.

AGENTS—Gentlemen or Ladies—can make money rapidly by taking subscriptions for this beautiful work. One dollar and six stamps from Agents, for one copy and a letter of Agency stating special terms.

Until the duplicate plates are finished only 200 engravings can be furnished per day—but they will be forwarded in the order of receipt of subscription.

If more than $10 are sent in one letter, better get a draft, or have the letter registered.

To avoid mistakes, the NAME, TOWN, COUNTY and STATE should be PLAINLY written.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

The history of this great remedy is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experiences of one nation, but consists of a compilation of testimonials from the sick of every country—a record, the like of which has never been adduced in favour of any discovery or invention since time began.

BILIOUS DISORDERS.

In whatever form disease attacks the liver, it is repelled and exterminated by this searching, painless and irresistible corrective.

Let the sick whom the faculty have abandoned resort with confidence to this antibilious agent, and a real return to health and activity will be the unvarying result.

DYSPEPSIA.

The great scourge of this continent yields quickly to a course of these antiseptic Pills and the digestive organs are restored to their proper tone; no matter in what hideous shape this hydra of disease exhibits itself, this searching and unerring remedy disperses it from the patient's system.

GENERAL DEBILITY AND WEAKNESS.

From whatever cause, LOSSES OF STRENGTH, and all other signs of a diseased liver, and other disorganization of the system, vanish under the eradicating influence of this all powerful antiseptic and detergent remedy.

WEAKLY FEMALES

Should lose no time in trying a few doses of this regulating and renovating remedy; whatever may be their complaint, it can be taken with safety in all periodical and other derangements; its effect is all but miraculous.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy known in the world for the following diseases:

Asthma,	Headaches,
Bowel Complaints,	Indigestion,
Coughs,	Influenza,
Colds,	Inflammation,
Chest Diseases,	Inward Weakness
Costiveness,	Liver Complaints,
Dropsy,	Lumbago,
Dysentery,	Sore Throats,
Debility,	Piles,
Fevers and Ague,	Stone and Gravel,
Female Complaints,	Secondary Symptoms,
Fits,	Venereal Affections,
Gout,	Worms of all kinds.

☞ CAUTION.—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

. Sold at the Manufactory of Professor Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 63 cents and $1 each.

☞ There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each box.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.

CONSOLATION FOR THE SUFFERING.

Nearly fifty years continual use in every part of the habitable globe, amongst the savage and the civilized alike, has proved that simple eruptions, open sores, hard tumors, scrofulous developements of all kinds, abscesses, cancers, old wounds, and, in one word, every species of inflammation and suppuration, whether in the skin, the flesh, the glands, or among the muscles, can be arrested and permanently cured, without danger, by rubbing in and using as a dressing, this inestimable Ointment.

SCROFULA, ERYSIPLAS, AND SALT RHEUM, ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN, PILES, AND FESTULA,

No remedy has ever done so much for the cure of diseases of the Skin, whatever form they may assume, as this Ointment. No case of Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore Heads, Scrofula or Erysipelas, can long withstand its influence.

BAD LEGS, OLD SORES, ULCERS, &c.

Cases of many years standing that have pertinaciously refused to yield to any other remedy or treatment, have invariably succumbed to a few applications of this powerful ointment.

Arising from a bad state of the blood or chronic disease, are eradicated, and a clear and transparent surface regained by the restorative action of this Ointment. It surpasses many cosmetics and other toilet appliances in its power to dispel rashes and other disfigurements of the face.

Every form and feature of these prevalent and stubborn disorders is eradicated locally and entirely by the use of this emollient; warm fomentations should precede its application. Its healthy qualities will be found to be thorough and invariable.

Both the Ointment and Pills will be used in the following cases:

Bunions,	Skin Diseases,
Burns,	Swelled Glands,
Chapped Hands,	Sore Legs,
Chilblains,	Sore Breasts,
Fistula,	Sore Heads,
Gout,	Sore Throats,
Lumbago,	Sores of all kinds,
Mercurial Eruptions,	Sprains,
Piles,	Stiff Joints,
Rheumatism,	Tetter,
Ringworm,	Ulcers,
Salt Rheum,	Venereal Sores,
Scalds,	Wounds of all kinds.

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.

D. W. BOSHER, Proprietor.

IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, and, next the largest Hotels in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of, well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expense, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to any the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

SONG OF THE SABBATARIAN.

[This is a very successful satire on the duplicity and hypocrisy of the Sunday of the age. Every line and every stanza of it tells well, and the truth to the letter.]

Go barricade the river up,
And padlock down the mill
We'll have no trains on Sunday run
We'll have no steamers quill
Should the police on the quay
To make his carotus fear,
And tease the mercy of the waves
Till Sabbath shall be past.

Command the sun to stand his course,
Forbid the wind to blow,
And tell the flowers they shall not bloom,
The trees they shall not grow.
The little wild bird shall not sing,
The lambking shall not play,
The cattle shall all silent be—
It is the Sabbath day.

And order yonder reprobate,
That steals along the road,
To turn at once from sinful ways,
And seek the house of God.
What need hath he of light and air?
Go bid him fast and pray,
And put a mournful visage on—
It is the Sabbath day.

And tell the cook when you are down,
At four o'clock we dine,
And as we'll have some company,
To lay the cloth for nine;
And call at number twenty-six,
And say to Mr. Brown,
That after dinner we will drive
A few miles out of Town.

But first run for my letters, John
And bring them quick to hand
That I may see before I go
How all the markets stand;
For, if I did not weigh them well,
I'd much be in the lurch;
And then being round the carriage, John
And we will drive to church.

A Story-telling Party.

TERRIBLE DAY IN A RAILWAY CARRIAGE.

"But first, to appreciate the incident," I began, "you must know my friend. He is the most bashful of men and he stutters; under the influence of excitement he can hardly speak. Afflicted by a sense of shame he would be gladly dead and buried. To such men life must be a deadly struggle.

My friend also is liable to misfortune; so that with a light heart and a great capacity for enjoyment, he is usually as miserable as any Manichean would desire. I might tell you many extraordinary adventures that have befallen him. This was his last:

"My friend you must know—we will call him Harry Saxon—is a very amiable amateur cricketer out of his bank. He will take the train at six o'clock in the morning to be down a hundred miles north or west to a match. On the occasion which led him to the disaster, he had journeyed north and played his game with success and satisfaction. But the next morning he had to be up in time for the first official hour at his bank, so he made over night, and escaped to bed at half-past one, a.m., breakfasted instinctively at 5½ and hurried to the station as quick as he could, arriving there 20 minutes too early, which cooled him, so much so that, when he entered carriage, he bethought him that he had on his light cricketing trousers, and might as well—since he had a warm pair and was alone in the carriage—change them and comfort his limbs.

He remembered also that he could not appear at his bank in light flannels. I hope no one will see any harm in that resolve. If the British public should suggest that there were modest cows in the passage as he was flying by, and young corruptible heifers, I have only to remark that Mr. Saxon was much above their level. As it was dry, moreover, he could not offend the moo.—Of course I share the belief that we were born in trousers, and never get out of them. I would merely observe that the case of Mr. Saxon was an exception to the rigid rule. Had he done all the honors to the renowned modesty of this island, he would have drawn the second pair over the first. I can only excuse his oversight by the declaration that he did not think of it.

Unfortunately the thought of a change had not struck him till he had shot ahead some miles. And, again, very unfortunately, as we say when we would cite instances clearly fated, the young gentleman took off his light flannels before he opened the carpet to discharge his thick tweeds.

Mr. Saxon is of somewhat hasty temperament, slow to conceive,—quick to execute, a fine quality which occasionally leads to trouble—for while he was unstrapping his bag the train instantly slackened speed and suddenly stopped.

On perceiving this alarming fact, Mr. Saxon pulled at the straps with tremendous vigor a second or so, and then looked out of the window with a face outwardly as composed as any ordinary traveller with no burden on his mind and with clothing as his legs may wear. What a feeling of a baffled man so placed must have been I need not tell you. Analysis, if we wished to subject him before a jury of prudes, might be justifiable; but you will not require it. Mr. Saxon's heart gave a bound.

There was a body addressing the guard, who pointed down in the direction of Mr. Saxon's head, and had her swiftly on.

Mr. Saxon made a final effort to array himself in one of the other pair, gave desperate up, and thought it best to block the window and look extremely unwitting. He could not believe that his fortune could be so cruel as to send this lady straight to him when, without wishing to be uncourteous, he profoundly wished her at Jericho.

Now Mr. Saxon should, no doubt, have spoken and warned the lady off. He stammered, as I have told you. He did not speak and he was unintelligible.

The guard wrenched at the door. Mr. Saxon had just time to hide his mother-for-God's-sake-a rug which he had purchased lately with him, when the door opened and the lady became his companion. The train whirled, and off they went.

Now my friend Harry Saxon tells me he considers it a curious thing that the lady after a little while, began to regard him pointedly, something unbecoming.

"M-adam I said Harry, after several important efforts.

The lady replied, "sir" or "yes." He chronicles it exactly, but I forget.

"Ha....ha—are you going the whole way to T...., Tom?" said Harry, gasping and holding on his rug wit both hands.

"No sir," said the lady haughtily, coldly and shortly.

"What a blessing!" thought Harry, sinking back.

The lady opened a book.

At the next station, Harry to kneel at her imploringly. She would not go. Perhaps thought he, she is going on to the last station but one. There he was sure the carriage would be filled.

He begged politely of her to tell him when it was her intention to quit the train.

"Really, sir!" said the lady sharply, "may I inquire why you are so anxious to find out."

"Not at all," said he, speaking agonistically as he looked.

The lady resumed her reading. An old gentleman, with two young ladies, now entered the carriage. Harry tightened and compressed the rug, and sat glaring wildly at them.

"At all events," thought Harry, "they can't make me more." This consolatory notion had hardly whispered its barren comfort to him, when a shock was felt. He just saved himself from going into the old gentleman's arms.

"What's the matter?" enquired the old gentleman.

The train had been brought to a standstill.

"Oh! what is it?" cried all the ladies in a breath.

"Stop a minute my dear," cried the old gentleman. "Don't be alarmed. Perhaps one of us had better get out and speak to the guard."

"Oh papa you shall not go!" exclaimed the young ladies; and the one who was alone exclaimed,

"Perhaps we shall be safer outside than here."

The young ladies reiterated that their papa should not go. A common eye was directed to Harry, who sat with a fiery face trying to appear perfectly unconscious.

"Well if I may'nt go, perhaps this gentleman will be kind enough to do so, said the old gentleman.

Here was a direct appeal. Harry pretended not to hear.

"Oh, it must be something dreadful!" cried the ladies.

"Will you oblige us, sir?" said the solitary lady, by getting out and speaking to the guard.

She addressed poor Harry.

"Mr. Saxon grimaced horribly; "I should be h....happy," he began.

"Just ask him if there is any apprehension of danger," said the old gentleman thinking that he had spoken in the assenting sense.

"I....I k....con't," says Harry despairingly.

The ladies regarded him with wonder. All Harry's hopes were that they would get out and leave him. Danger, ruin, dreadful casualties, he was indifferent; anything was better than his present torment.

"Can't brook, sir?" said the old gentleman.

"Con't m....move," said Harry.

"No legs—eh! Dear me!" the old gentleman observed. And yet the rug displayed a pair in outline. "Paralysis—lower limbs!—Dear me!"

Several people were out of the train by this time. The old gentleman and all the ladies got out too.

A'ord was passed that all were to leave the carriages.

Harry heard the old gentleman say "We mustn't leave that poor fellow, we must help him out."

Meanwhile he was at the carpet-bag again. One clear minute to himself, and Harry would be a man. He cared not to risk his life for one clear minute. Before the quarter of the time had expired and while the garment dangled unfilled, the old gentleman opened the door, and informed Harry that he was prepared to help him out. There also stood the ladies looking on most charitably.

"Do p....please shut the door," cried Harry.

"Come now, sir!" exclaimed the old gentleman, "you must come out. Give me your arm."

"I k....can't, I tell you," said Harry imploringly.

"But I will help you, sir," said the old gentleman.

"I won't!" says Harry.

"You must be mad sir, you must be stark mad," said the old gentleman.

Pushed to extremity Harry answered, "So I am."

"Then you must be dragged out, sir, dragged out by main force, sir. Guard!" shouted the old gentleman.

The guard came up but only to say it was a false alarm. The train had shaken off one of the carriages and turned a few sheep into rarities.

Off they went once more.

It is really cruel to dwell on Mr. Saxon's misfortunes, and the incidents which were perpetually aggravating them and driving him to frenzies of distraction. At one place a lady entered who could not ride with her back to the engine. He was positively—being the only gentleman facing it—forced to favor her by changing seats; and gallant by nature and obliging, he had to shatter a downright refusal. But realize his position, and I think that you will admit that, for a bashful man, Mr. Harry Saxon endured four hours of mental misery that it would be hard to match, as many could rather submit to, brave, him in the state I have left him in. I will justify this artistic stroke, by assuring you that Mr. Saxon is, at the moment I speak to you, perfectly prepared to smile his face in the most polished society.

The gentlemen discussed what might have happened to Mr. Saxon.

"For a bashful man," said Mr. Linton, "it must have been a great a disaster as I have ever heard of."

Mr. Saxon believed he would have made a confidant of the first lady—woman as, in a body, very considerate under such circumstances.

"That's what I should have done," said Mr. Simmons, "she would have looked out, of the other window, and all would have been over in a trice."

The H.E.L.P. thought so too, and evinced the indifference of the ladies of India to flannel garments.

Mr. Jacquison excused himself from making any remark saying he had none to offer. But the match was a performance far excelling our flimsy efforts to please, and I only wish every good man and true may have as good this Christmas season.

A first-rate Ghost Story!

(From the Sandusky Register.)

We have received the particulars of a recent ghostly interference in the internal arrangements of a family residing on the line of the Sandusky, Dayton and Cincinnatti Railroad, which may be interesting to our readers. The names of the parties, or the exact location of the transaction, we do not feel at liberty to publish. A farmer was bereaved of his wife some nine years ago, an infant daughter—an only child being left to console him in his afflictions.—The daughter grew up a beautiful and amiable young lady, had not long since did what maidens have done from time immemorial—fell in love.

But unfortunately for her, the young man upon whom she had lavished the wealth of her youthful affections was poor, although worthy of her in every other respect; and when her stern parient, discovered how matters were drifting, he ordered the distracted daughter to confine herself to her room, and to her needlework, and commanded the young man of poor but honest parents, never again to darken his door.—A stern, unyielding parent was he; and so satisfied of this fact was the daughter, after a rather intimate acquaintance of about sixteen years, that she uttered not a word of remonstrance, but went quietly into seclusion and decline, pining away after the approved style of disappointment and forlorn maidenhood. The young man didn't pine, but took a school to teach, exhibiting a commendable degree of energy and perseverance.

About this time a wealthy and miserly old fellow in the neighborhood, who had seen the lady a few times, and became enamoured, made known his flame to her father, directing him to tender her his hand in connection with a miserable fiend he called his heart. The father was in ecstacies with the proposed match, as the old man, though old enough to be her grandfather, was known to be immensely rich. The girl, however, treated the proposition with disdain, mingled with a considerable quantity of disgust, and intimated that she would "die first." The father, who was not accustomed to have his authority set at nought in the slightest particular, stormed and raved like a madman, and swore his child should obey him.

Several weeks passed by in which the daughter pined more and more, still firm in her resolve however; and her father became more and more enraged at what he termed her senseless obstinacy. At length one day after a long and private interview with the miserly old lover, the father directed his daughter to prepare herself for the ceremony, as marry she must, that very day, the husband he had chosen for her. Then, sealing the command, with a big oath, he threw himself upon his horse, standing at the door, and rode away for a magistrate to make the ill-assorted twain one flesh and blood.

After the expiration of about an hour, a horse's hoofs were heard coming down the road and into the yard at a breakneck speed and those who ran out of the house saw the farmer hurriedly alight, his face covered with a deadly pallor as he stepped upon the threshold of his door, he sank down insensible, and was borne into his room by the affrighted servants.

The wedding did not take place that day; for after recovering from his fainting fit, the farmer was confined to his bed by a long and severe fit of sickness. The daughter nursed him tenderly, and after a hard struggle between life and death the former conquered, and the old man began to recover. He was a changed man, however, and one day told his daughter the cause of his great fright on the day he rode for the magistrate. He said, he was dashing madly down the road leading to the village, and while passing through a bit of woods, he was conscious of a rustling above his head. At the same time a pair of white wings reached down and caught the bridle from his hands, and as he looked up he saw the form of his dead wife hovering above him, her face most sad and melancholy, nearly touching his own. The horse wheeled suddenly, as if directed by the ghostly hands upon the bridle rein, went at a frightful rate towards home. The vision remained hovering about him, with its hands upon the reins, until the horse turned into the court, when it vanished quite suddenly.

The story became known and is firmly believed by all the neighbors. They think that the ghost of his wife interfered to save her.

BRAVERY.

The appointment of a fresh batch of magistrates furnishes almost as much fun and ridicule as the evolutions of a militia corps on training day. One of the last appointed conflagrations, living in a village on the banks of the River Trent, was passing a tavern (his property) when he heard a row. Looking in, he saw a fight; immediately, his magisterial dignity rousing in his throat, chased his utterance. As soon as he recovered his self-possession, he unbuckled a candle and rushed into the melee, exclaiming, at the top of his voice, Pease! I command peace!! I command peace in the Queen's name!!! Heedless of his peaceful cries, the combatants were now struggling on the floor. That spirit of pugnacity, for which his subjects are renowned, soon caused him to exclaim, "Pull them up! Pull them up!"

Seeing that all blandishments to stop the fight were fruitless, he called on the bystanders to show fair play and then retired in disgust from the bloody scene.—Wrangler.

SHAVING PREACHED AGAINST!

A theologian of Cambridge University (England) has published a sermon in which he declares shaving to be "a hindrance to the spread of the Gospel!" He says:—"While the halls of our churches are pealing their welcome to the house of prayer, while thousands of devout, silent clean-shaved Christians, are wending their way to the sanctuary, lo! in every by-street a shaving-shop stands open, and through the glazed door you see—what? A human face soaped and lathered to the eyes, with another immortal being standing at his side, one hand grasping his victim's nose and the other defying the commandment of God with the uplifted steel. Who can doubt that a wilful transgression of the fourth commandment is in process, and that the historic art itself is called into exercise on the holy day? For, look, the evidence is before you. The operation begins; the razor is applied. But by hit the latter disappears; and after sundry winces and wry faces, the performance is concluded. The lip and chin are denuded of nature's edifying garb; and the liberated subject takes his place—too late, alas! for church now—in civilized society. He is a cleaner, (in the effeminate will talk,) if not a better man.—But why cleaner? Because a fashion, dating from a licentious period, has attached a false idea of uncleanliness to hair upon the mouth and chin. And to gratify his false taste, this arbitrary whim, hours of valuable time must be wasted, and the blessed Sabbath desecrated."

A ROMANTIC STORY.

Mrs. Rose, celebrated for her beauty and constancy, died lately at Hemmingham, England. Having met with opposition in her engagement with Captain Charles Rose, she followed him in men's clothes, where, after such a research and fatigue as scarcely any of her sex could undergo, she found him in the woods lying for dead, after a skirmish with the Indians and with a poisard wound. Having studied surgery in England she with an ardor and vigilance which only such a passion could inspire, saved his life by sucking his wound, the only expedient that could have effected it at the crisis he was in, and nursed him with scarce a covering save the sky for the space of six weeks. During this time she remained unsuspected by him, hardyed her skin with time and bark, and keeping to a man's habit, still supported by the transport of hearing his unceasing aspirations of love and regret for that dear, though he then thought distant, object of his soul, being charged by him with transmitting to her, had the captain his remains, and giving assurances of constancy and gratitude for the unparalleled care and tenderness of his nurse, the bearer of them; but recovering, they moored into Philadelphia, where, as soon as she found a clergyman to join her to him forever, she appeared herself, the priest reason saying her. They lived for the space of four years in a fondness almost ideal to the present age of corruption, and that could only be interpreted by her declining health. The fatigue she had undergone, and the poison not properly expelled, which she had imbibed from his wound, undermined her constitution. The knowledge he had of it and piercing regret at having been the occasion, affecting him most sensibly, he died with a broken heart last spring, at Johnstown, in New York. She lived to return and implore forgiveness of her family, whom she had distressed so long by their ignorance of her destiny. She died in consequence of her great grief and affliction, at the age of twenty-six.

COLD WATER.

The Rev. J. W. Shaw, D.D. sends the following to the Pittsburg Reformed Presbyterian Magazine for April 1860. "I have not had the pleasure of hearing the famous Temperance lecturer, Gough, but I have heard of and some where seen an extract from his description of water. Recently I happened on a description attributed to another source, which reads much as his did. Its paternity is as follows: Paul Benton, a minister in Texas, in order to obtain an audience, following the plan of Rowland Hill, advertised a barbecue, with better liquor than was usually furnished.—The people assembled. No fault was found with the first part of the promise, but with respect to the liquor, a desperado in the crowd cried out:—"Mr. Paul Denton you have lied. You promised not only a barbecue but better liquor, "Where's the liquor?" "There" replied Denton pointing to a fine spring near by. "There!" he repeated, with a look and gesture beneath which the other quailed, "There is the liquor which God, the Eternal, brews for all. Not in the simmering still, over smoky fires, choked with poisoned gases, surrounded with the stench of sickening odors and corruptions, does your father in heaven prepare the precious essence of life—the pure cold water. But in the green glade and grassy dell, where the red deer wanders, and the child loves to play, there God brews it; and down, low down in the deepest valleys where the fountain murmurs, and the rill sings, and high upon the mount in tops where the naked granite glitters like gold in the sun, where the storm-cloud broods, and the thunder storm crack, and away far out on the wide, wide sea, where the hurricane howls music, and the big wave rolls the chorus, swelling the march of God—there He brews it, the beverage of life, health giving water. And every where it is a thing of life and beauty: gleaming in the dew drop; singing in the summer rain; shining in the ice gem, till the trees all covered, turned to living jewels, spreading a golden veil over the setting sun, or a white gauze around the midnight moon; sporting in the glacier's frolicking its bright snow curtain softly around the wintry world, and weaving the many colored sky like the seraph's zone of the xyrus, still it is beautiful that blessed life water."

The pulmonary bubbles on its brink; its gems brings not madness and murder; no blood stains its glass; pale widows and starving orphans weep not burning tears in its depths; no drunkard's shrinking ghost comes it from the grave in the bitterness of despair; Speak out my friends would you exchange it for the demon drink alcohol?" A shout like the roar of a tempest answered —"No!"

RESPONSE OF THE REFEREE TO GEORGE WILKES.

From Bell's Life in London.

We have taken some pains to trace out the actual state of the case as to the struggle at the ropes—when we were forced out of our place by the crowd—and also as to the fact of Heenan's having struck the seconds of Sayers after the battle was virtually over, and we are informed by gentlemen of position who were present, and who had an opportunity of seeing, that once if not twice, while Heenan had Tom on the ropes, the latter got his knees on the ground, and was lifted up again by the Boy, and again held in his vicious grip. If this were the case, and we see not the slightest reason to doubt its truth, it is a fortunate thing for Heenan that the Referee was prevented from seeing; for, had he witnessed the act, he must have decided against Heenan. By the rules of the Ring, a man on both knees is down, and if interfered with after that event before "time" is called, he is entitled to the money. On the other point we have only the statement of Macdonald to contradict the testimony of some twenty or thirty gentlemen, besides our own reporter, as to Heenan's having struck down and kicked Jemmy Welch, and knocked Sayers off his second's knee. As to his kicking Brunton, the evidence is not conclusive, but in the case of Welch and the Champion we have no doubt, especially as we are corroborated by the account in Leslie's Illustrated Paper, alluded to below, which was written by Mr. Wilkes, of Wilkes' Spirit of the Times. That account says, "Heenan, finding that, though Sayers could not or would not rise from his seat in the corner, and his seconds refused to award him the victory that belonged to him by throwing up the sponge, he advanced upon him in the midst of his seconds, and struck him where he sat." This admission is tantamount to an acknowledgment of defeat by a foul blow; and yet Mr. Wilkes calls on every impartial Englishman to award the belt to Heenan. Our own opinion of the matter is this: that as the men were fighting in a crowd without any order or regularity, and as Heenan was almost blind, and his saddle was doubtless in a state of considerable confusion, he did not quite know what he was about, and may, therefore, be excused for the unjustifiable act. Nevertheless, had the referee been present, he would have had to do his duty, and no one would more have regretted this than himself. * * * That the ring was broken in by the friends of Sayers alone we deny. We are satisfied the police, who had been gradually increasing in number, commenced a pressure from without, and, being aided by certain gentry, who were present for other purposes than sport, and whose object was to stock their pockets above from the pockets of the spectators, the pressure gradually reached its culminating point at or about the time named, when the Ring was broken in, spectators and all being gradually forced either into the ring itself or else altogether away from its precincts. As to who cut the ropes—if they were cut—we cannot say: but this we do say, if it be true that the life of Sayers was in danger, and if he had touched the ground with his knees, it was a perfectly justifiable act.—Hugging is not fighting, and though there is no written rule on the subject, a man should be released when it comes to such a near thing as it is stated to have been on Tuesday. * * * We deny strenuously that Heenan, in any way, gained a right to the belt. The determination on the part of the referee not to allow a second meeting during the week is strictly in accordance with the general custom in this country, where men are so injured as ours these gallant fellows on Tuesday. The last instance on record of a postponement was the match between Aaron Jones and Sayers, in which the former was allowed a month, on producing a medical certificate that he would require that time to get over an injury to his hand somewhat similar to that incurred by Sayers. Mr. Wilkes apparently would impute that the referee has departed from the usual practice on this occasion, and says that Heenan does not require any consideration on the ground of humanity. In reply, all we have to say is, the referee is the proper person to judge in this matter, and has had considerable more experience in such matters than Mr. Wilkes himself. Had he ordered a second meeting this week, he would have ordered it the same day, supposing a fitting ground could have been got, and, as by that time, Heenan would have been blind, we leave the public to decide who would have had the advantage. Had he postponed it till the following or any succeeding day in the week, his conduct would have received universal execration in all countries where "humanity" at all enters into public consideration.

GOSSIP ABOUT THE COMBATANTS.

(Correspondence of the Belfast News-Letter.

London, April 21, 1860.

The account in the Times was written by Mr. Woods, whose graphic description of the Great Eastern in the storm of the 25th of October last, was admitted to be one of the finest efforts of journalism on record. Mr. Woods is an Irishman, and was formerly connected with the Morning Herald. He was the correspondent of that paper in the Crimea; and his account of the battle of Inkerman was admitted to be the finest that appeared of that heroic struggle. The Manchester Guardian account of the fight was written by Mr. Tom Taylor, the Secretary of the Board of Health, dramatist and art critic of the Times. Prefixed to a dramatic, and, at the same time, an artistic pursuit, Mr. Taylor was of course at hand during notes in the ring. As Mr. Moncton Milnes sits for Pontefract, the borough which Mr. Gully, the celebrated prize fighter, once represented, the honorable gentleman no doubt thought it tremendous upon him to put in an appearance at the "mill." The letter which appears in the Times of yesterday signed by Mr. Wilkes, in behalf of Heenan, repudiating the allegation of the umpire, that it was at the request of the American party that he ordered men to leave off, was written at the Times office. The American Champion and two of his friends went to the Times office to see the editor and explain their version of the affair. They were at Printing-house-square two hours, and the cads became so tumultuous in their demonstrations to get a peep at the transatlantic gladiator, that he had to be let out the back way, from which he hobbled into Bolt-court-Hill and got into a cab. Putting aside, of course, the brutality attending to prize-fighting as altogether indefensible, it must, nevertheless, be admitted that it was a gallant thing for Heenan to cross the Atlantic to fight the champion of England (who defeated every adversary but one) on his own soil. The general impression here is that the men will have another meeting, and the whole affair managed so quietly that the general public will know nothing about it until its all over.

THE LATE ACCIDENT AT NIAGARA.

The Drummondville Reporter of Thursday, gives the particulars of the late melancholy accident at the Falls, by which the little boy of Mrs. Macklem's was swept down the Cataract. The Reporter states that Mrs. Macklem along with Mr. Street and three of her children were out walking along the banks of the river. They had proceeded (with the children a very little in advance) to the southern shore of the Island, where a walk is constructed for a considerable length, and a platform some yards square. The children, stimulated by their youthful joy and brimful of health and spirits prattled along, and knowing that they were under the eyes of their ever watchful mother and uncle, dreaded not and were unmindful of the danger they were in. When the mother and Mr. Street had just got to the platform, to their horror, they discovered that the eldest boy had fallen into the river, and was being borne rapidly down the stream. Mr. Street instantly darted to a point lower down, with the hope that the child might float close enough for him to grasp it. But alas! most unfortunately just at this point the stream, instead of flowing evenly along, is turned aside by an eddy and the child was swept swiftly along towards the Falls. When a short distance below the island the body sank from view and was seen no more. The stream where this truly distressing calamity took place flows swift and strong, and all was over in a few seconds. The body has not yet been found, although parties are on the watch all along the river to lake Ontario."

HOW CANADA IS TREATED BY THE HOME GOVERNMENT.

From the London Times, April 23.

Mr. Haliburton's speech, delivered in the Committee on the Customs Bill last Friday deserves a better answer than it has received in the House of Commons. It is not that Mr. Haliburton was right in the principles he attempted to lay down, or that he had good reason to claim the assent of the House of Commons to the amendment he proposed. On the contrary, he was entirely wrong. All that he said was opposed to the best proved truths of political economy, and is contrary to the spirit of modern legislation. The timber trade of Canada is at this moment one of the last remaining protected interests tolerated by this country. We who have turned away from the pleasant tales which were told us by "our fellow-citizens, who have imitated that our own farmers shall compete with the low rented lands of America and the low-paid labor of Russia, who have stripped our town manufacturers of all protection, and put every foreigner upon an equality with every Englishman, had left the Canadians with a protection which we have refused to our fellow-citizens. Mr. Haliburton values this generosity at no less a sum than five millions of money. Now, as it is a law of nature that if one man receives another must pay, gain on an artificial profit to the Canadians of five millions means a loss to this country of that sum. It is quite evident that this could not continue for any length of time. There could be no reason why we should deal with the Canadians differently from the manner in which we deal with our own people. We are very glad to see Canada a portion of the British empire, and we are very willing to do our part honestly as a mother country towards a colony. But we are by no means in a temper to bribe any people to remain in union with us. It may be true—indeed, if we trust history, we must admit that it is unfortunately true—as Turgot said, that "colonies are like fruits, which cling to the tree only until they are fully ripened." Whenever that time may arrive, and they are naturally ready to fall, it can be of no advantage to the tree to tie them on by artificial bands. If, as Mr. Haliburton would seem to threaten us, that time has arrived, the fruit will fall, and the next passer-by—the United States, for instance—will eat it up. If however, that time is not yet come, Canada is welcome to all the substances and support she can obtain from the parent stem, and the English people will be proud to see her grow and ripen. But we must not be threatened with rebellion and separation, as though the Union between Canada and England were only a one-sided bargain, in which England had all the advantage and Canada endured all the burden. The fact of this union must not be used as an engine to extort money from us in the shape of protective duties. It is an equal and an honorable relationship, and when it ceases to be this it becomes worthless.

The precedent of the War Independence in the United States has nothing to do with this matter. Those "rebels and Cromwellians," as Mr. Haliburton calls them, contrasting them with his own countrymen, who are "men not to be trifled with," had real wrongs, which have no existence in Canada. We do not propose to pull down the Canadian mills, restrict the right of the Canadian people to manufacture their own produce upon their own soil, or to tax them at our will. All we resolve is to buy our own timber wherever we please, just as we buy our gloves, and our shirts, and our woollen cloths, and, indeed, everything else, wherever we please. But there is one point in the precedent to which Mr. Haliburton points, in which we do see a similitude. In 1763, when Grenville and Charles Townshend undertook "upon pure Whig principles" to tax America, it was the pleasure of the House of Commons to treat these colonies not only with injustice, but with incivility, and with some measure of contempt. We are not in this case guilty of the injustice, but we are afraid that we may be held to be in some degree guilty of the incivility which which nearly a hundred years ago and more perhaps, to alienate the affections of our colonists than even the injustice. The great complaint of Franklin and his friends was that Parliament would not even hear what the few advocates of America had to say against the Stamp Act. Barre and Conway would, indeed, make themselves heard, but not forty members could be got to vote against the rejection of the Virginia petition. No one would present the petition from New York, and it was complained of that "less resistance was made to the Stamp Act than to a common Turnpike Bill." The manner in which the Government of that day dealt with their colonists had, perhaps, as much to do with subsequent events as the actual legislation which they effected. When we read the debate of Friday night, we are tempted to ask whether it is the intention of our great Parliamentary orator of the present day to renew his costly blunder.

We think there can be only one opinion in England—there will be certainly only one opinion in Canada—as to whether this expostulation of that loyal dependency of the British Crown has been treated with courtesy and consideration. We refuse to consider the speech of Mr. Haliburton as merely the speech of a great humorist. It was the case of the Canadian people, and except so far as it intimated a threat of disaffection was powerful and well conceived. They had a right to expect that the Ministry would expound to them the necessity of the step he was taking. They most naturally be excited, vexed, and perhaps irritated; it was the duty of the English statesman to soothe, and, if possible, to convince them. Instead of doing so, Mr. Gladstone contented himself with a personal vindication as to the terms of a letter, and then contemptuously challenged Mr. Haliburton to count votes in a division. Never was there a more ill-timed instance of what Bolingbroke calls "a Minister pleasing himself upon majorities." The Canadians had a right to a full and careful explanation.—It was an occasion upon which a short careless reply was an insult. We do not for a moment intend to suggest that there was any intention, either on the part of the Chancellor of the Exchequer or of the House of Commons, to deal slightingly with either the question, or with Mr. Haliburton as with the Canadians. It was manifestly the object of Mr. Gladstone to secure one stage of his measure, and not to risk it by a long speech at a late hour. But this was not the occasion for small House of Commons tactics. His was dealing adversely with the interests of unrepresented and distant subjects of this empire, and it behoved him to consider not only their rights, but also their feelings. When this debate reaches America we fear that Mr. Gladstone's disrespectful reply will create a much greater soreness than his more withdrawal of the protective duty. We are anxious that it should at the same time go forth to the Canadas that the English public is in no party to this careless treatment, and that while they will not give up the protection they have ransomed from themselves, they disapprove any conduct in an English Minister which may bear the resemblance of discourtesy to a people whose affection and loyalty are reciprocated and remembered here at home.

HARDEN, THE WIFE MURDERER.

The following extracts from the proceedings on the last day of this extraordinary trial, are probably of deeper interest than any fiction that ever was published;—

The Attorney-General then proceeded to review the circumstances of the case during the week prior to her death, tending to show that Harden administered poison. The question of motive on his part was argued—that he did not love, honor, and cherish his wife—that the evidence shows he was forced into the marriage against his will, and had neither respect nor regard for her. He had gratified his purposes with this young lady at an early day, unpleasant as it may be to say it and he admitted this in verbal answers to charges made in letters of her parents. After the passage of these letters it is testified that he said he had erred, and gave a promise of marriage. Now, gentlemen of the Jury, when I come to look over these letters they speak a language which cannot be mistaken—taken in connection with the evidence given on the stand before you. The evidence shows that the community was full of scandal; that the officers of the church had taken the matter in hand. He was on probation and could be dropped at conference on any charge. He gave the written obligation, and afterward, gentlemen, solemnly denies the existence of any such engagement.

He said: "I will go into jail, and lie there and rot, and be carried out through the key-hole," &c., "before I marry her;" and then, a striking instance of the want of respect he had for prayer, he asks that companion to pray for him. The letters previous to marriage show Harden's resistance to the last. During the correspondence he endeavours to get a riddance by representing his circumstances as burdensome: by threats that if she forced him to marry her, the mercy she now shows to him he would show to her all her life. The prompt and effectual measures which secured marriage, the further circumstances attending her visit, and death, tended to show that, with the motive to get rid of her, the means were also at hand, and the opportunity presented for committing the deed.

* * * * * * * * *

We have travelled, gentlemen of the Jury, through this case in all its tortuous windings, through the beaten track which leads from its beginning to its conclusion; at every point of observation, every circumstance, every incident; point with a steady, unbending finger to this man of guilt. If you look for the dark motive which urged him on, you find it there. If you look for the conduct of a murderer endeavouring to escape responsibility and conceal his acts—if you look for that conduct before or during her illness, or at the time of her death, in its infinite variety of circumstances, all lead to one and the same conclusion. If in your hearts, gentlemen, you have reasonable, well grounded doubts as to his guilt open his prison doors and let him go free; but if you firmly believe, as I doubt not you do, that this is a wicked, diabolical murder, do not, I pray you, become participants of its guilt, by a false and wrongful verdict.—Do not, by giving impunity to him, encourage future secret deeds of crime—the work of a moral monster. Let it never be said that in the County of Warren the wife-murderer, the secret prisoner, escaped the just penalty of his crime. Remember, gentlemen, your first and your last obligation—"a true verdict according to the evidence, so help me God."

The charge of the Court occupied over two hours in its reading. It was exceedingly severe upon the prisoner, but entirely impartial. The circumstances of the case made it severe. During its delivery the face of the prisoner was covered with his handkerchief, but there was no perceptible tremor about him; his nerves seemed to be made of iron. While several members of the jury wept immoderately, in view of the great responsibility resting upon them, not a tear came from the eye of him whose life will, in all probability, be cut short by their verdict. If he is guilty, as nearly all believe him to be, he is what the Attorney-General very appropriately termed in addressing the Jury, a "moral monster."

He committed murder upon his young and confiding wife, who to him to destruction, as the evidence in the case abundantly shows, by the most diabolical means, known to the murderer, he stood by her death-bed, and saw her life wasting away by inches without affording her any relief when her piteous cries went up to him for "water, only a glass of water, I am burning up;" he fed her day by day with that which caused her mortal agony; he refused to send for her parents in her dying hour, to secure their parting blessing; he has committed the great crime perjury, by swearing before the Coroner's Jury that his wife, on his dying bed informed him that she had poisoned herself.

Eight o'clock, p. m.—The trial is over, and Harden is convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree. The Jury have just returned into court after an absence of two hours, with a verdict of guilty on all four counts laid in the indictment. At the ringing of the Court-House bell, a few minutes since, people rushed from every quarter, and soon the house was densely packed with eager spectators. The prisoner was brought in amid breathless silence. His aged father, who sat by his side during the whole of the trial, was not present to hear that awful word, "Guilty," fall from the lips of the Foreman of the Jury, which consigns his unfortunate son to the gallows. When that word came to the ears of the prisoner, his head fell upon the table in great agony. His counsel, who sat by his side were fixed to their seats, and some time elapsed before they recovered their self-possession. It was an awful moment, all present were impressed by the circumstance of the occasion.

Sentence of death, to be executed on the 27th day of June next, was pronounced next day, and thus is ended one of the most extraordinary capital trials which have ever taken place in this or any other State.

THE LAWYER "BROWN."—In the good old times a man named Wilson was taken up on the charge of having stolen some spoons. He had no counsel to defend him; but Mr. Graham, getting an opportunity to have a word with him in private, agreed to get the fellow acquitted for a hundred fee. The lawyer told him not to say a word but "Spoons" to all inquiries put to him. Wilson was arraigned. "Have you any counsel?" the Recorder asked.—"Spoons!" said Wilson. "Have you any counsel?" the Recorder demanded, still louder. "Spoons!" replied Wilson. Mr. Graham interposed, "Your honour perceives that this man is a fool, and by no means in a fit state of mind to be tried." The clerk put the usual question, "Guilty or not guilty?" to which the prisoner steadily answered, "Spoons." The Recorder asked what that was to say for, and finding it was for nothing a few spoons, and thinking the fellow near the lunatic-hind, told him to go—Graham followed him out, and demanded his fee, "Spoons," said Wilson.

EMIGRATION—VALUABLE STATISTICS.

By a return to the House of Assembly, made by the Provincial Secretary embodying the annual reports of the Chief Emigrant Agent at Quebec, and of the German and Norwegian agents, we find many interesting items. Following we give a summary of the contents of the Return:

The whole number of emigrants embarked for this country in the year 1859 appears to have been 8,781, but by 12 births during the passages it becomes 8,793; lessened again by 15 deaths, it leaves the sum total landed 8,778. These were brought in 85 sailing ships, and 35 steamers. The average of the passages was 44 days, while the steamers only occupied averagedly 11 from Liverpool, and 16 days from Glasgow.

The emigration is characterised as healthy. The mortality was almost entirely in the sailing vessels, and of the 15 only 2 were English; and no deaths occurred at the Quarantine station. The decrease in proportion of deaths, as compared with 1858, was 40 per cent. The diminution of arrivals was equal to 35 per cent. The national distribution of the whole number is as follows:—English 2,610; Irish 1,248 Scotch 1,787; Germans and Poles 1,400; Norwegians 1,751; Belgians 5; Canadians (whatever that means) 277. It is remarkable that the emigration from a country the thickest populated of all the countries of Europe is expressed by a unit!

Only 16 vessels sailing from the United Kingdom came within the regulations of the Parliamentary Act; while 45 were exempt.

The classes of persons emigrating is also a feature of interest. They are distinguished thus:—Farmers 1,031, Laborers 86d, Mechanics 388, Professional men 13, clerks agents, and traders 331, servants 46, miscellaneous and unenumerated 392. Of the farmers, about one-half were British; of labourers about two-thirds; of mechanics nearly the whole number.

Of the whole number of immigrants only 132 appear to have been aided thereto by private individuals or charitable institutions of that number 46 were from England; 21 youths being from the ragged schools.—From Ireland 95 were so assisted, mostly single women who readily found employment.

From 1829 to 1859 the total number of emigrants is reported at 922,593 souls.

The total expense of the Emigration Department has been $27,914 50. The diminution in expense from 1858 is $463.

A table is given of the relative expenditure at the various stations of Quebec, Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto and Kingston, and Hamilton. The total expenditure throughout the year has been $18,473 61. The direct relief to immigrants has in the last year decreased 50 per cent. The cost of agencies shows a decrease of $313.

Of the adult immigrants arrived at Quebec far the greatest number, 451, were sent to places in Canada East, and only 130 to Canada West. 208 were forwarded to places in the United States! The proportions as to nationalities were English, 154, Irish 340, Scotch 7, Germans 349, Norwegians 147. Of Scotch, the great foster-fathers of emigration in days of yore, there were but 7 adults! At Montreal the transmissions to Western Canada tell, being, with the district of the Ottawa, 185. 812 persons received assistance at Toronto the average cost 98 cents each.

At Hamilton the number assisted was 349, at an average cost of $1 35 cents each. Nearly all were forwarded to places in Western Canada.

The reports of the several agents are quoted for some particulars. 4,131 arrived at Toronto; of these 1,855 only remained in Canada, the rest, 2,276 proceeded to the Western States. Their condition was generally good. All found employment, though at reduced wages.

14,236 persons arrived at Hamilton during the years 3,441 settled in Canada, and 10,095 proceeded to the United States.—Nearly a thousand of these had to receive assistance to get to their friends. Mr. Dixon reports that employment for those was very scarce even for agriculturists; for mechanics and others, he fears they would be exposed to disappointment and want.

In the Ottawa district, of the 496 immigrants a number were Germans who had removed from Berlin, C. W., and settled on Government lands in Alice and Wilberforce. All these, including 23 mechanics, found ready and steady employment. The agent speaks most encouragingly of this district as a sphere of immigrant employment.

The agent at Montreal gives special information on the frauds practised on persons who come by the route of New York. They are, it seems, detained as long as possible, and then sent on by the most circuitous routes.

Particulars are furnished of the foreign emigrants for which we cannot find room at present. They consist of 2,856 souls, 1,756 Norwegians, and 1,100 Germans. The decrease from 1858 in the former is 900. A few settled in the Eastern Townships; the rest in the Western States. The agent gives a high character of the German emigration, which the Western States know how to appreciate, and, it would appear, adopt very unlike methods to secure them.

A whole colony of Prussian peasants who intended to emigrate to Brazil, falling short in their means, were thrown upon this country. As no way of employment could be found for them, they were discharged to the Western States.

The agent draws attention to the relative decrease of emigration from Ireland.—The average number during the five years ending with 1854 was 77,300 per annum; that in the five succeeding years has been only 18761. This diminution is attributed to the superior condition of their own country of late, and the large bounties given in the Queen's service.

The want of a well-qualified person as agent for the Province, to promote emigration in the United Kingdom, is strongly insisted on. The United States have numerous agents there, as well as on the continent of Europe generally. The emigration officer in this country looks forward to the establishment of such an agency in Liverpool with great satisfaction. He dwells upon its utility, and points out a few modes in which the information necessary might be disseminated through him.

A tribute is paid in the report to the ocean steamships, which make their weekly trips to Quebec, or in the winter to Portland; such cannot fail to prove of exceeding value to the Province in the promotion of emigration. Their feats (for they are such) are recounted, without any allusion to their recent melancholy failures. It appears that the two lines of steamers—the other being the screw steam line (the Anchor) from Glasgow—brought out a majority of the emigration of the season.

The report states that the later class of emigrants, being much less numerous than in former years, has also been of superior character. They were also, fortunately, in greatest part, of persons coming out immediately to take up land, or else to join friends already settled here. So that the want of employment, which has generally prevailed, has not brought with it so much distress as it otherwise would have done.

The Chief Emigration Agent's report closed by adverting to the increased facilities held out to emigrants for acquiring land either wild or improved.

NEWCASTLE DIVISION.

HENRY RUTTAN, Esq., has issued an address to the electors of Newcastle Division offering himself as a candidate for Legislative Councillor. Mr. Ruttan, although somewhat retired for a few years past is not unknown in the political arena; having represented the County of Northumberland in the House of Assembly, and as he tells us in his address, "was unanimously elected Speaker of the House." It would be superfluous in us to point out the sterling qualities in the man which have ever won for him the esteem and respect of his fellow citizens both in public life and private business, and it is with satisfaction we hear that men of all shades of political opinions are united on the purpose of electing Mr. Ruttan. The address before us is an unmistakeable sign of the times. It is highly significant of the turning tide in Upper Canada to hear an old Conservative like Mr. R. calling for "the union of parties, and an independent representation," to free ourselves from Lower Canada domination. He stands on the ground upon which the approaching struggle must be fought, and boldly tells us that the two great points to be carried are "Separate political existence from Lower Canada, and a Responsible Government." The address proceeds "Without extinction of our present system of irresponsible government, it is doubtful if we can attain a severance of the Union, and without a separation of the Provinces we never can attain a really Responsible Government."

Our present Governmental working Mr. Ruttan bel eves to be a sham, a miserable apology for a responsible system; he complains of the many means of bribery and corruption in the hands of the Government of the day for carrying elections. The following paragraph shows the spirit of the man, and also tells a tale and points a moral:

"I am amongst the oldest born in Upper Canada, have mixed with, and profess to know as much of its people and history as most men, and never until a year past have I heard any well-grounded complaints about taxes. Discontent is fast taking hold of our rural population, and I warn the Executive Council that unless some means be devised by which Upper Canada can have a separate political existence, and a less expensive system of Government organized, there will be ere long trouble, such as may call for the utmost exertions of our best men to allay."

There is no mistaking the above language and coming in the form it does makes assurance doubly sure. Listen to this:

"We have now a Union but it is merely a name Does any rational man believe that any two peoples so different and wide apart in languages, laws, religion, habits, manners and customs, the one united, the other split up in parties, can have anything like an equal chance in one body legislating for the whole? Is it not clear that the united body will control the whole? And is it not equally clear that they are this moment making use of their strength, and will continue to make use of it to keep in power under our present system of Government just such people as they like? It is in the very nature of things that they should."

Hon. SIDNEY SMITH has been spoken of by a few as candidate for the office, but Mr. RUTTAN is first in the field and will probably be elected. We sincerely wish him success. SMITH is aware that he leaned upon with a degree of suspicion in this part of the district, and his Ministerial career of the Monk Patriotic General has not lessened that feeling in the least.

EXEMPTION FROM SEIZURE.

An Act passed by the Legislative Council to exempt certain articles from seizure in satisfaction of Debts.

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. Chapter twenty-eight of the Ordinances of the Legislature of the late Province of Lower Canada, passed in the second year of Her Majesty's reign, is hereby repealed.

2. So much of Section one hundred and fifty-one of Chapter fifteen of the Consolidated Statutes of Upper Canada as exempts certain chattels from seizure under writs of execution issued under the provisions of that Act, is hereby repealed, and in lieu thereof the following words are substituted, and shall be read immediately after the word "excepting" in the said section, namely, "Those which are by law exempt from "seizure."

3. Section two hundred and fifty-four of chapter twenty-two of the Consolidated Statutes of Upper Canada, is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor, namely:

"254. The goods and chattels exempt by law from seizure, shall not be taken in "execution under any writ issued either of "the said Superior Courts, or from any "County Court."

4. The following chattels are hereby declared exempt from seizure under any Writ issued out of any Court whatever in this Province, namely:

1. The bed, bedding and bedsteads in ordinary use by the debtor and his family;

2. The necessary and ordinary wearing apparel of the debtor and his family;

3. One stove and pipes, and one crane and its appendages, and one pair of handirons, one set of cooking utensils, one pair of tongs and shovel, one table, six chairs, six knives, six forks, six plates, six teacups, six saucers, one sugar basin, one milk jug, one tea pot, six spoons, all spinning wheels and weaving looms in domestic use, and ten volumes of books, one axe, one saw, one gun, six traps, and such fishing nets and seines as are in common use;

4. All necessary fuel, meat, fish, flour and vegetables, actually provided for family use, not more than sufficient for the ordinary consumption of the debtor and his family for thirty days, and not exceeding in value the sum of forty dollars.

5. One cow, four sheep, two hogs, and food therefor, for thirty days.

6. Tools and implements of or chattels ordinarily used in the debtor's occupation to the value of sixty dollars.

5. Nothing in this Act contained shall exempt from Seizure in satisfaction of a debt contracted for such identical chattel, of any article enumerated in Sub-sections three, four, five or six of Section four of this Act.

6. The debtor may select out of any larger number the several chattels exempt from Seizure under this Act.

AN IMPENDING CRISIS.

The war between the Council and Mayor rages with increased vigor. Each new meeting is only a field for a fresh encounter; but the siege has nearly reached its climax. A scene the most disgraceful we have ever witnessed in a legislative body was enacted in the Town Hall on Monday night last. Cross-firing went on for some time during the discussion of the Lock-up nuisance, till Mr O'Beirne moved for an adjournment, when the insurgents showed themselves in their true colors. Notwithstanding the fact that Councillor Whyte was addressing the Chair and speaking to the question, it was claimed (and that to by the learned lawyer) that a motion for adjournment was always in order. The Mayor very properly refused to put the motion until Mr Whyte had done speaking, when (mark it well) six dignified (!) Councillors deliberately rose and left their seats, breaking up the quorum. Now as this is a direct question of right and wrong, we give the rule relating to motion for adjournment:

BY-LAW NO. I.

Rule 14. "A motion to adjourn shall be always in order, provided such motion be so made as not to interrupt a member while addressing the chair and confining himself to the question in debate."

Mr. O'Beirne and his cronies ought to be frowned upon for such ruffianly conduct. They could not have been ignorant of the rule for it is one of their own adoption.—This case will serve to show the disposition of the men, and such acts will continue to be perpetrated unless the rate-payers take the matter in hand. When two servants are continually quarrelling it stands to reason that their master will be the sufferer, and if the present state of things is allowed to go on the Town must be the loser in the fracas. The Mayor expresses himself willing to resign his post if the people disapprove of his conduct. Councillors will take no such manly course although it is alike open to them, for certain defeat awaits them. There is but one way to remedy the evil: let a requisition be drawn up and signed for a meeting of the rate-payers; let the sense of that meeting be taken, and the condemned compelled to desert the stronghold.

QUEEN'S BIRTH-DAY!

The programme for Thursday next, 24th May, is a pretty large one. It affords sports for all tastes.

The Rifle Corps will be out on parade, and a muster of the Sedentary Militia will take place on the Court House Green.

The Victoria Quadrille Club will hold a Social Ball in Scott's Rooms in the evening, to which a limited number of outsiders will be admitted by ticket. See advertisement.

The Band of Hope Division Sons of Temperance, Smith, will hold a Soiree on the grounds adjoining their Division Room, in Hall's neighborhood; a rustic tent will be erected on the grounds for the occasion.—Rev. JAMES A. DAVIDSON, the noted Temperance lecturer, and several other eloquent Speakers will address the meeting.—We advise every one who can enjoy a quiet ride of four miles and a social tea meeting to go to the Sons' Soiree.

The Good Templars of Mount Pleasant also hold a Soiree on Thursday to which the public are invited.

There is some talk of John Fowler running an Excursion train to Port Hope, but we have seen no official announcement yet.

Gentlemen admirers of the turf may expect a pleasant day at the Whitby races. The list of prizes is large, and the good people of Whitby generally try to entertain visitors on such occasions with a great deal of courtesy.

A pic-nic excursion to Whitby on the steamer Maple Leaf, offers a rare chance for a cheap sail on the Lake. The Maple Leaf will leave Port Hope harbor at 7 a. m., and the fare to Whitby and back will be only 50 cents.

Next week the Examiner will be distributed to Town subscribers on Wednesday evenings; advertisements for that issue must be handed in by 2 o'clock, p. m.

QUICK TIME.—By the new running arrangement on the Port Hope road, we have the Toronto morning papers on our table at 10.50 a. m., with Parliamentary telegraph despatches dated at Quebec noon morning at 12 o'clock. We think this is up to the New York lightning express train.

☞ The Licensed Inspector is instructed to enforce the act requiring that barrooms, &c., shall be closed from Saturday night till Monday morning. This is commendable.

TEMPERANCE LECTURE.—We have been requested to announce that Rev. Jas. A. Davidson the celebrated Temperance Lecturer, will deliver a lecture in the Town Hall on Wednesday evening next. Mr Davidson has in the last seven years delivered upwards of 300 lectures on his favorite theme in the principal Towns and Cities of Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Great Britain, and with the extended experience of his late tour his lecture cannot fail to be one of the highest interest. Admission free.

☞ The veritable "Sam Slick" in all his travels never met a truer specimen of a mean man than it was our fate to stumble across not many days ago. Happening in a certain book-store in town we were attentively engaged when a long, lank-looking gentleman (!) strode in with a newspaper in his hand which he had borrowed from the book-seller, and throwing it down on the counter quietly remarked that "there wasn't much in it." If any person will show us a meaner man or tell us of a meaner action than that we will "yield the point, and turn clock-maker."

☞ Before starting out shopping be sure to look at the advertisements in our columns. Only liberal men advertise, and a good bargain can never be had from a stingy merchant.

TOWN COUNCIL.

MONDAY, May 14th, 1860.

The Council met. Present—His Worship the Mayor and Messrs. Toole, Morrow, Ormond, O'Beirne, Chamberlen, Ryan, Harty, Maloney, Whyte and McDougall.

The minutes of the last meeting were signed.

The Mayor called the attention of the Council to the filthy condition of the Lock-up, stating that there was no ventilation and that a fortnight ago Mr. Morrow had furnished it with a tin vessel, for the use of persons confined, that it had been continually used without being emptied, and the place was now unfit for habitation. He requested the Council to provide some remedy, so that the health of the prisoners should not be endangered, otherwise he would be obliged to order its disuse.

Mr. Oliver N. Bradley's account amounting to $13 00 was ordered to be paid, as also that of Mr. John R. Benson, amounting to $30 00. The account of Mr. A Edminson for work done on the streets last year was on the recommendation of the Finance Committee refused payment. The By-law appointing Mr. Lundy Trustee in place of Mr. Chanton was passed.

Mr. O'Beirne moved seconded by Mr. Chamberlen,—That with a view to making the estimates of expenditure for the present year, the streets and bridges, and fire committee be requested to report as soon as possible to the Council the amount that will be required for expenditure in connection with the different departments during he year.—Carried.

Mr Chamberlen moved seconded by Mr Ryan,—That the Clerk be requested to sell by public Auction on Monday, May 21st, the Market Tolls of the Town in accordance with the Market By-law, and that it be advertised in both the papers of the Town and by public hand-bills.

The Mayor thought it was rather sharp practice to deal with the market question so summarily. Some of the Councillors were not in their seats and there was a good deal of difference in opinion about the tolls; for his part he was in favour of obliging sellers of country produce to come to the market, but while they got no value for their money he was opposed to exacting tolls. He condemned the By-law.

Mr Maloney moved seconded by Mr Whyte—in amendment,—That the consideration of the question be postponed until the next meeting of the Council.

The amendment was put and lost, the original motion was carried.

Mr Toole moved seconded by Mr McDougall,—That Messrs Morrow, Ryan, Whyte, Ormond and O'Beirne be appointed a special committee to examine into the matter between Mr Carthcart and the Town with a view of ascertaining exactly what can be done towards the collection of arrears of the tolls and report to the Council at the next meeting.—Carried.

Mr Toole moved seconded by Mr McDougall,—That the railroad committee be instructed to call on Mr John Fowler and ascertain what his intentions are in regard to the matter between him and the Town and particularly the last half-years rent now past due.—Carried.

Mr Chamberlen asked if there was anything before the Council.

The Mayor answered that the state of the Lock-up was before the Council. He wanted them to say they would or would not put in a condition that it might be used with safety to a prisoner's health. He wanted to know what they would do with the stink-pot.

Mr O'Beirne said he saw no difference between a convict in the Penitentiary and a prisoner in the Lock-up. In the Penitentiary the prisoners were made to clean their cells, and the constable on liberating prisoners from the Lock-up should make them carry off their Retorts.

The Mayor said that he would not allow a constable to commit such an outrage upon the feelings of a prisoner as to make him in daylight carry out the vessel and return it clean. And as to Mr O'Beirne's comparing the social condition of a convict with that of a drunken man in the lock-up, it was out of comparison altogether, for sometimes respectable men got into the lock-up.

Mr Ormond in amendment—Do you call a man respectable who gets drunk, sir.

The Mayor—Yes, Mr. Ormond, and you may recollect a pleasant who not very long ago was a perfect sot who would not like it to be said of him he was not respectable.

Mr O'Beirne excited—Mr Mayor this continual insult the state of the lock-up exists only in your imagination. And if it is a nuisance could you not employ some person to carry out the stinkpot every day.

The Mayor—Mr O'Beirne I am glad to say that the state of the population of this town is not so degraded as to become such characters as will be willing to do that dirty work. And I should be afraid in making the proposition I might be told to do it myself. [A very excited scene ensued in which the council in their endeavor to calm the irate Mayor lost all for the exception of a few, their dignity.] No person shall be incarcerated in it.

Mr. Toole would remind the Mayor that when it was decided to use the present site for a lock-up he agreed to it.

The Mayor—Yes I urged the Council to build a suitable place which they refused to do; but they undertook to ventilate and heat and provide with proper conveniencies the place selected, which being the most I could get from them I had to consent to take. But now it is finished, and not one of these things attended to.

Mr Whyte rose to speak

Mr O'Beirne moved that the Council do now adjourn.

The Mayor—Mr O'Beirne your motion is out of order, Mr Whyte has the floor.

Mr O'Beirne, in a rage—Mr Mayor do you understand that I move an adjournment.

The Mayor—Yes I understand it, but you have had your say and as long as any other councillor desires to be heard I shall hear him.

Mr O'Beirne—Then Mr Mayor if you will not put my motion for adjournment we will adjourn ourselves.

Accordingly Messrs Toole, Morrow, Ormond, Ryan and O'Beirne left their seats and the Council being without a quorum broke up in confusion.

Quebec Correspondence.

The debate on the Resolutions continued: Benjamin speaks in defence of the Union: fails to meet the real issue—McGee shows that the Constitution of 1840 is nearly abolished—Sandfield McDonald admits something else than the double majority will in the end be required—Dorion supports the resolutions—The details of the Ministerial plan of Confederation demanded: do the Conservatives propose a written constitution and elective Governor?

QUEBEC, May 5, 1860.

The Government have set upon one of their weakest men to reply to Mr. Brown. Mr. Benjamin on Wednesday took the floor, but did not attempt to meet any of the hard facts argued by Mr. Brown. He denounced the policy of the opposition as "miserable" "mean", and employed other epithets to express his detestation of it, but he did not dare to attempt to meet the facts in any tangible way. He did deny that Upper Canada paid two-thirds of the revenue, he did not believe that legislation that Upper Canada desires, she cannot obtain. he did not deny that the patronage of the Crown is dispensed to the Ministry.—He contented himself as was to be expected with abusing the opposition. He wound up by moving the previous question, which I believe the ministerialists will vote for. This is done in order to prevent any amendments to Mr. Brown's resolutions, and in order to prevent free discussion. It is a cowardly proceeding worthy of its supporters.

On Thursday, the debate was resumed by Mr. McGee who announced his intention of supporting the resolutions and made a speech of great power. He showed that the constitution of 1840 had been greatly modified since it was enacted—that of its 60 clauses 22 had been repealed—and that its essential features were abolished. He alluded particularly to the change by which the Legislative Council has been made elective, which is of course a complete blow at the British system, and yet the Tories who now cry out that the opposition policy is revolutionary aided in carrying it. Mr. McGee also showed that we have had 3 different constitutions in Canada within 16 years, and that each one was shrewly defended. Just so to-day some defend the remains of the constitution of 1840.

Sandfield McDonald spoke also on Thursday. He announced that he did not think his pet plan of saving the country, the double majority would not be a permanent cure, and he admitted that if the census showed Upper Canada to have much larger majority than Lower Canada, he should propose some other remedy. What that would be he did not tell. He is opposed to Representation by Population. This shows that he even is prepared to take another. The Tories propose a general confederation of the Provinces. Perhaps the Review will tell us whether the local governors are to be elective—whether there is to be a written constitution—and who is to preside over the general confederation? It is time the ministerialists let us know the details of their plan. They fancy they are mighty smart in demanding the details of the opposition policy. What of the Galt-Cartier Ross scheme of confederation? Is it to die still-born?

Mr. Dorion declared himself for dissolution of the Union, and the formation of two or more local governments according to his plan of 1856. He thought Upper Canada would strive to have 250,000 greater population than Lower Canada when the census is taken, and said the question could not be shirked as Lower Canada would offer representation by Population he thought the Convention plan the true remedy.

The debate was to have been continued to-day, but neither Cauchon nor Foley were ready, and two or three hours were wasted in useless discussion relating to procedure. The debate is to be resumed on Monday. Cartier says he will bring it to a close then. John A. McDonald has not been in the House for several days. The most painful rumours are in circulation as to the cause of his absence, he is of course in the city—Prerogative is expected to take place by the 15th.

THE WEDDING OF THE MICROSCOPE. We understand it is through the agency of this marvel viewing instrument that Dr. Ayer has at length succeeded in finding the PALLADIAL MEDIAN and determining its character. Of its effects we in this section have abundant evidence in the FEVERISH AGUE which it alone produces when absorbed through the lungs into the blood. It has long been held to be a vapor or something in the nature of water from decayed and decaying vegetables. Under a great magnifying power, the Doctor has found the germs to contain distinct organisms, viz: Vibrio, Cornet-spouting precisely with which to fill the blood of Ague subjects. They range 13,000 times less than visible to the naked eye, but have distinct character and form.—He thinks they are reproductive in decaying matter or in the blood, and takes their long continued life or thickness of form as they are in the system. He mentions that they resemble in character the other parasites of animals, or such as the germ of rotten or of a dead body, the pill of which we have to reproduce themselves with great rapidity like yeast in unbaked flour, so that the slightest quantity impregnates the whole blood. Yeast, through a powerful magnifier is seen to be a formation of vegetation which grows, feeds, and goes to seed in a short time. Blood in unless distinctly vegetable, but has much the appearance of animal life, although its motion cannot be perfectly distinguished. What the Doctor claims to have distinguished is that it is organic sub-

Communications.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—I see in your last week's paper that some of our city fathers moved that my letter be not received as it was couched in disrespectful language towards the Council. What deplorable ignorance, but it is in keeping with that body. The letter was not addressed to the Council, it was addressed to his Worship the Mayor, as the letter itself will show. By giving it an insertion you will oblige,

Yours &c.,
WM. ARNOT.

(COPY.)
Peterboro', May 1, 1860.

To A. Sharpe Esq., Mayor.

SIR,—I would call your attention to the side walk in front of the shop that I now occupy, as it is in a very dangerous state. I have spoken to Councillors Ormond, Morrow, O'Beirne and Cluney, but none of them seems to know any thing about it. As you are (in my judgment) not only Mayor but Council, I appeal to you to order a new side-walk to be laid down. If this is not done without delay I will take steps to have it done, I would have laid this letter out to you last night, but I was glad to know the Hall was more profitably employed. By attending to the side-walk you will confer a favor to your Obedient servant,

WM. ARNOT.

THE DUMMER DIFFICULTY AGAIN!

MR. EDITOR,—Having seen and read in your issue of the 26th ult., a letter signed G. Archbill, dated the 11th of April, and directed to W. Cluney, Esqr., Mayor of this Municipality, to be read at a meeting held at Mr Thos. Hambridge's, Dummer, on the 12th of April last. And believing, with my grand-mother, "that one story is good till another is told," I take the liberty of soliciting your impartial paper that we may, for the benefit of your many readers, examine for a short time [illegible] matter.

1st. He says I was not a legal candidate from the fact that a poll had been taken between Geo. Payne and Walter Douglass, qualified candidates, regularly proposed and seconded, for nearly, if not fully, two hours before I was brought forward." Now I would ask Mr. Hill where he gets this information, I have too high an opinion of Payne's truthfulness, in stating the false declaration to admit of saying, to suppose he ever made such a statement. Mr. Hill says, "there are persons who can prove that such was the case." I call on Mr. Hill to name one creditable person will make the statement, the man cannot be found; all who were present at the commencement of the election know that the polling commenced in less than five minutes after Payne and Douglass were nominated, and as we did not object to this step at the time, we do not object now, yet we claim one full hour from the commencement of the election for nominating candidates, and we are prepared to prove, by at least two creditable persons, that my nomination took place in something less than forty minutes after the commencement of the Election. Mr. Hill further says, "the second poll book given to the Clerk by the Returning Officer shows it is pretty plainly, besides proving that his first was a false one. But it would have been rendered still more evident had it given in the original po nation at Warsaw on the 19th of January last, authorizing me to proceed at once against the Clerk and Geo. Payne, and voting the necessary funds.

But, Mr. Editor, I fear I have already trespassed on too much of your space, and shall conclude by saying that the movers and seconders at the Hasbidge meeting, reside in another ward, and are fast earning for themselves no enviable notoriety.

I am, sir,
Yours truly,
WM. MANLEY.

Latest from Europe,

BY THE "ASIA."

The steamship Asia, Captain Lott, which sailed from Liverpool at noon on the 28th, and touched at Queenstown on the 29th ult. arrived at New York yesterday.

GREAT BRITAIN.

On the 26th, the Reform Bill was debated at length, Lord John Russell being the principal speaker. No action was taken, and the debate was further adjourned till the 30th ultimo.

On the 27th, in the House of Commons, Lord John Russell stated that Government were doing all in their power to stop the slave trade in coolies between China and Cuba, and had opened negotiations with Spain on the subject.

His Lordship also, in reply to enquiries on the subject, explained the present position of the negotiations for a Congress on the Savoy question. He stated that the French Government thought the Congress should not meet until the Sardinian Parliament had ratified the cession of Savoy, and that they demurred to the proposal that there should be no civil or military occupation of Savoy until the decision of the Conference was arrived at. The Prussian government held the same views as the English Cabinet, but the other powers had not been communicated with.

The bill abolishing church rates was debated and finally read a third time by a vote of 235 to 226.

The frauds on the Union Bank of London, by Pullinger the Cashier, attracted much attention. A subordinate cashier, Edward J. Lyttleton, had also been arrested, a deficiency of £1,240 having been discovered in his accounts. He attributed the deficiency to Pullinger.

The London Times publishes a letter from Sevastopol, stating that the English graves there had been violated, and that the remains of Commander Hammett was entirely unburied, and lie bleaching in the sun. The latter eulogizes the conduct of Col. Graham, the American contractor at Sebastopol, for the expense and trouble he has voluntarily incurred to keep the cemeteries in order and repair delapidations.

The Sailors' Home, Liverpool, was destroyed by fire one Saturday night, April 28th, and thirty lives lost.

THE LATE FIGHT.—A sporting paper says:—"On Friday night Sayers and Heenan met at Owen Swift's. Whilst at the latter place a gentleman came in, and without speaking a word, put into Tom's hand a new £5 Bank of England note, and then walked out of the house. On the same evening Lord Stamford requested Tom, when leaving Epsom, to pay him a visit, as Lady Stamford wished particularly to see him, as she had a handsome present to make him. The House of Commons, on Friday, collected nearly £200 for him, all grades of politicians subscribing. Mr. Bennett and Mr. Gideon intend giving him £50 each; and a committee of gentlemen, with two gentlemen at their head, will be appointed to invest the money for him, so that he can receive it in weekly sums. At George Beyer's, Black Horse, Cranden Street, on Saturday night, two gentlemen came into the bar—one gave George £20, and the other £10 for the brave Tom Sayers, as a reward for his pluck and gallantry." A letter has been received from the Champion intimating his intention of being in Liverpool on Friday or Saturday, when the purse of £120 subscribed on 'Change will, no doubt, be presented to him in public. The subscription for Heenan is going on with spirit, especially among the American captains and officers at this port, and it is not unlikely that Heenan will at no distant day, also be invited to Liverpool to receive a purse of £300 or £400.—Liverpool Post.

FRANCE.

Rumors were rife in Paris on Wednesday, of another Italian attempt against the life of the Emperor. It is certain that several Italians were arrested before their Majesties left for the fancy ball which was given that evening by the Empress at the mansion of her minister, the Duchess of Alba. The fete was magnificent; 200,000 francs were expended to the electric lights and decorations. Their Majesties concealed their persons under dominoes. Lord Cowley was present.

The Grand Duke Nicholas of Russia was expected to visit Paris shortly.

AUSTRIA.

It is now stated that the late Baron Bruck was dismissed from the Ministry of Finance, just before his death, on account of his complicity in the late gigantic frauds, and he expiated his offence by committing suicide. A Vienna dispatch gives the following particulars:—"When the body of Baron Bruck was judiciously examined, a cut, which extended from the jugular vein to the fore part of the throat, was found.—The unfortunate man had also inflicted wounds on the inner part of both wrists.—The contents of the stomach are being analyzed by the sworn medical authorities, no suspicions are entertained that he swallowed poison." Another despatch says that the cut in the neck was only superficial, and that death was caused from loss of blood at the wrists.

It is asserted that the Hungarians regarded the new letters patent of the Emperor of Austria as of no value whatever.

It is reported at Vienna that Austria has for some time past been endeavoring to persuade Prussia to enter into an alliance, on the basis of a mutual guarantee of their respective territories. Up to the present time Prussia has not consented to guarantee Venetia.

ITALY.

King Victor Emmanuel continued his progress in Italy. Count Cavour had returned to Turin.

Advices from Sicily state that the insurgents continued to keep up a guerilla warfare in the interior of the country.

THE POPE AND HIS ARMY.

The Opinione Nationale confirms the following statistics on General de Lamoriciere and his principal officers:—

"For the defence of seven millions, the power of the Pope [illegible] has only been constituted by French bayonets. The result of any troops is now reduced to 15,000 men. Agricultural.

YOUNG FARMERS.

An English gentleman coming to Canada would think trade or commerce of any kind beneath him, but would not consider his dignity at all lowered by becoming a farmer. On the contrary, to cultivate his own acres would be, in his eyes, an essentially aristocratic employment, as it has been, and is in almost every country in the world. True, he would find difficulties in hiring labor in this as compared with older countries, and would have to be more dependent on his own ingenuity and toil,—a difficulty which might induce him to remove to a city and seek some other business probably with little success;—but his first choice would be farming. Now, how comes it that so many of the aspiring youth bred to agriculture seek to get away from the most noble, most useful, most independent, and, we might say, most desirable of all callings? We have seen not a few young men, vigorous and powerful in mind and body, with the glow of health on their cheeks and good-nature beaming in their eyes,—young men who might aspire to anything in any walk of life,—we have seen rush, we say, come into the city and seek round for situations, where no situations are to be found. They were willing to do anything, and for any remuneration, just to get a beginning; but nobody wanted beginners who were already men. And if they had succeeded in their search, they would only be at the beginning of mortifications. They would be ordered about and frequently found fault with; they would find themselves, for a while, at least helplessly in the way, for no one has any time in business to explain over, thing to beginners. They would be closely confined; lose, in a great measure, their robust health and elasticity, and often sigh for their green fields and lowing cattle again. Now to such young men we would say: Agriculture, horticulture and fruit-growing, offer quite as high prizes as commerce,—a fact of which Panton, Downing and Strauss offer familiar illustrations,—and Canada needs intelligent, enterprising cultivators more than any other class.

Nor is agriculture a distasteful pursuit.—The pleasantest sight in the world, perhaps, is a large field of turnips or carrots in long, straight rows, covering the earth with their beautiful dark green leaves; or a field of wheat bearing a waving sea of heavy ears at the rate of 40 bushels to the acre; or a flock of sheep, fat, full, fleeced, clean and contented, grazing on the hill sides. Indeed every man has such a natural craving for agricultural pursuits, that mechanics, lawyers and mechanics, generally speaking, wish to make a fortune in order to retire to a farm and have finer cattle and better crops than anybody else. Ever since the expulsion from Eden, also, men, and still more women, have wished for a garden in which to spend their leisure hours. Now, what every body desires as the result of a life of successful toil, namely, a farm and garden, should not be lightly esteemed by those who are born and brought up on them.—Witness.

UNRULY ANIMALS.

I will tell you how I avoid having unruly animals. I believe that, as a general rule our domestic animals are never unruly except as they are taught by their owners or those having charge of them. Some persons, when removing stock from one field to another, will let down a few of the top bars; or if they don't happen to have bars or a gate just where they wish to turn through, they will throw off a few of the top rails, and force the animals to jump the balance: and after driving the stock over, they will put up a part of the bars, or rails thrown down, leaving the fence lower in that place than in any other, as a temptation to the stock to jump back at the place where they had been taught to go over.

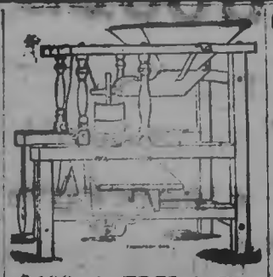
Now, sir, my practice is the reverse of all this; if I wish to turn hogs, sheep or calves through a common rail fence, I make what is termed a slip gap, letting down just enough of the bottom rails to let the animal pass, thus teaching them to go under rather than over the fence; and in letting cattle through bars I prefer to have a bar at the top letting them pass under; and if it rubs their backs a little all the better. But there is another fault, too common with some farmers. If fences are poor, in consequence of a scarcity of material, they should be the more carefully watched, if a rail gets thrown off, put it up immediately; if weeds or grass grow near the fence, on the opposite side from which your stock run, tempting them to reach over, and by this means push the fence down, remove the difficulty immediately out of the way. I am well satisfied that with proper care there is no necessity of having unruly stock, even with poor fences. Give them plenty of food and water; keep them comfortable, and they will not be unruly unless you teach them. I have raised several bulls within the last few years, some five or six of which I have sold; none of them have, to my knowledge ever jumped a fence. One of them now four years old last spring, is owned by a man whose fences are very poor, and although a bull owned by a near neighbor of his, two years younger, is in the habit of jumping any fence that comes in his way, in the neighborhood—even in or out of the field where this bull was at the time—he still maintains his orderly character.—Ohio Farmer.

MANGEL WURZEL.

This is one of the best roots adapted to our dry, hot climate. It contains about half as much again nutritive matter as turnips, and will produce a much heavier crop per acre; but it requires rich land and good cultivation. The soil should be warm, deep and thoroughly pulverized. It will grow on heavier land than the turnip or root-bage. Prepare the land this month, and sow about the first of June, in rows 20 to 24 feet apart, and 12 inches apart in the rows. If the seed is soaked three or four days in warm water and then rolled in gypsum, it will start sooner, and the plants will be more likely to get the start of the weeds. The plants should be thinned out when about two inches high, and if possible the work should be done when the ground is moist after rain. The same remarks will apply to white and yellow sugar beets.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA.

This terrible disease has appeared among cattle in some parts of Massachusetts, and has caused great alarm. It is generally held, though we have known instances to the contrary, where a good part of a herd have been attacked with, recovered. The disease has been known in this country in years past, but did not spread. The Legislature of Massachusetts have authorized commissioners to visit the infected districts, and to have all cattle that are affected killed and buried—the State to pay the owners the value of the cattle. It is hoped that by these means the disease will be confined to its present limits.



$100 A YEAR.

An income upwards saved to the Farmers, by Alden Mowry's

CHOP GRINDER.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known or in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient, with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 18 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain in ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are so fitted into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without altering or adjusting the Machine.

PRICE $60.

All orders directed to "M. Mowry, Ashburnham, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.

REAPERS.

I am manufacturing for the approaching harvest, and invite those who contemplate purchasing, to inspect my work and materials before giving orders elsewhere. I feel confident that for lightness of draught, the amount of grain they are capable of cutting, and their durability they cannot be surpassed if equalled, by any other Machine in the Province.

PHONOGRAPHY,
or
WRITING BY SOUND!!

PHONOGRAPHY was invented by ISAAC PITMAN, of Bath, England, in the year 1837. It is the most simple, most natural, most rapid, and most easily learned system of writing which has ever been, or ever can be invented.

During the past fifteen years, hundreds of thousands of persons, in England and America, in both public and private life, have learned to write Phonography, and thousands of social and business letters annually pass through the post office.

Nor is the great popularity to be wondered at. The present system of writing is exceedingly cumbersome, and totally unworthy these days of progress and invention. Phonography is equally as legible, can be learned in one twentieth the time, and can be written six times as fast! In other words, the labor of six days can be performed in one—one man can do the work of six. So simple is the system, too, that a person may learn to write it slowly, in a couple of hours. An hour's daily practice for a few weeks will enable any person to write Phonography with certainty, and with some degree of freedom. The same amount of practice continued for six months will enable a person to take reports of speeches, lectures, sermons, or conversation, and to read them with accuracy.

The late Hon. Thos. H. Benton, upon being presented with a verbatim report of one of his masterly speeches, taken by a little boy only twelve years of age, said: "Had this art been known 40 years ago it would have saved me 20 years hard labor." The learned senator spoke but a portion of the truth. What long-hand requires six years to accomplish, Phonography will perform in one.

To clergymen, Editors, Physicians, Lawyers, Secretaries, Conveyancers, Law and Medical Students, Lecturers, Printers, School Teachers, Merchants, School Boys and Girls, a knowledge of Phonography is of great utility. In fact there is no profession or calling in which it is not useful, and no young man's education can be considered complete without it.

During the past 9 months hundreds of persons in Canada, of every pursuit in life, have acquired the Art, from many of whom the subscriber has received neatly-written phonographic letters, expressive of their delight with the attainment, and the extraordinary ease with which they have acquired it.

For the purpose of aiding in the dissemination of so important a reform in his own country, the subscriber is now prepared to supply all who apply, with the MANUAL or PHONOGRAPHY, and the PHONOGRAPHIC COPY BOOK, sent by mail to any part of the Province, postage pre-paid, for the small sum of ONE DOLLAR.

Anybody and everybody, who can learn anything, can learn Phonography from the Manual, without other assistance. Those who wish to be able to put their thoughts to paper at the rate of from 100 to 250 words per minute, should send for the above-mentioned works at once. The instruction given by the Manual is as plain as A. B. C., and ten times as easy to understand.

PEALE'S
COURT OF DEATH.

The subscriber is now issuing 100,000

Splendid Coloured Engravings

Of Rembrandt Peale's celebrated Original Painting of the Court of Death.

at the unprecedentedly low price of

The lowest regular price for engravings of the size and quality of this is $5; and in answer to the question "how can they be sold for One Dollar?" the subscriber would state, that instead of issuing 5,000 copies at $5, he issues 100,000 copies at $1. The main expense of such a work is not in the paper and printing, but in getting up the plates. If 5,000 only are sold, $5 is but a fair price. But if 100,000 are sold at $1, the aggregate profits are larger than on the 5,000.

The Original Painting, of which the Engravings are a Fac-simile Copy, was painted by Rembrandt Peale, in the City of Baltimore, in 1820, and has been the study and admiration of tens of thousands of our citizens. It has long been valued at 25,000 Dollars.

Death is personified as a King or Monarch, and there is not a skeleton or anything repulsive in the picture.

There are twenty-three full sized figures in the engravings, and arranged into five groups presenting living representations of DEATH, WAR, SPECIAL PLEASURE, INTEMPERANCE, and the TRIUMPH OF CHRISTIAN FAITH OVER THE TERRORS OF DEATH.

It is a work to DELIGHT THE EYE and IMPROVE THE MIND. It can be studied and understood by a child, while its sublime conception of vast scope to the strongest imagination.

It has been made the subject of special discourse, by Rev. Dr. Spraque, Rev. Dr. Welch, Rev. Dr. Bacon, Rev. Dr. Cleveland, Rev. Dr. Wayland, and others.

A more impressive, instructive, or beautiful Parlor Ornament could not be purchased.

By enclosing ☞ ONE DOLLAR and four letter stamps (to pay postage,) the Engraving will be forwarded, postpaid, rolled in a strong case.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS supplied at a liberal discount.

CLERGYMEN can add at least fifty dollars per year to their income (in commissions) by interesting themselves in the distribution, and at the same time place in the hands of each subscriber, (what President Hale calls) "a sermon on canvas."

Any person sending $6, shall receive a sixth copy gratis postpaid.

AGENTS—Canvassers or Ladies—can make money rapidly by taking subscriptions for this beautiful work. One dollar and six stamps from Agents, for one copy and a letter of Agency stating special terms.

Until the duplicate plates are finished only 300 engravings can be furnished per day—but they will be forwarded in the order of receipt of subscription.

If more than $10 are sent in one letter, better get a draft, or have the letter registered.

To avoid mistakes, the NAME, TOWN, COUNTY and STATE should be PLAINLY written.

SURVIVE OR PERISH.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

The history of this great remedy is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experience of one nation, but consists of a compiling less of testimonials from the sick of every country—a record, the like of which has never been adduced in favour of any discovery or invention since time began.

BILIOUS DISORDERS.

In whatever form disease attacks the liver, it is repelled and exterminated by the searching, painless and irresistible curative.

Let the sick whom the faculty have abandoned resort with confidence to this antibilious agent, and a restoration to health and activity will be the unvarying result.

DYSPEPSIA.

The great scourge of this continent yields quickly to a course of these antiseptic Pills and the digestive organs are restored to their proper tone; no matter in what hideous shape this hydra of disease exhibits itself, this searching and unerring remedy disperses it from the patient's system.

GENERAL DEBILITY AND WEAKNESS.

From whatever cause, it matters not or wherein, and all other signs of a diseased liver, and other disorganization of the system, vanish under the eradicating influence of this all powerful antiseptic and detergent remedy.

SICKLY FEMALES

Should lose no time in trying a few doses of this regulating and renovating remedy; whatever may be their complaint, it can be taken with safety in all periodical and other disorganizations; its effect is all but miraculous.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy known in the world for the following diseases:

Asthma,	Headache,
Bowel Complaints,	Indigestion,
Coughs,	Influenza,
Colds,	Inflammation,
Chest Diseases,	Inward Weakness
Costiveness,	Liver Complaints,
Dyspepsia,	Lowness of Spirits,
Diarrhœa,	Piles,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Debility,	Secondary Symptoms,
Fever and Ague,	Venereal Affections.
Female Complaints,	Worms of all kinds.

☞ CAUTION.—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

Sold at the Manufactory of Professor Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in pots at 25 cents, 63 cents, and $1 each.

☞ There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.

CONSOLATION FOR THE SUFFERING.

Nearly fifty years continued use in every part of the habitable globe, amongst the savage and the civilized alike, has proved that simple eruptions, open sores, hard tumors, scrofulous developments of all kinds, abscesses, cancers, old wounds, and, in one word, every species of inflammation and suppuration, whether in the skin, the flesh, the glands, or among the muscles, can be arrested and permanently cured, without danger, by rubbing in and using as a dressing, this inestimable Ointment.

SCROFULA, ERYSIPELAS, AND SALT RHEUM, ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN, PILES, AND FISTULA,

No remedy has ever done so much for the cure of diseases of the skin, whatever form they may assume, as this Ointment. No case of Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore Heads, Scrofula or Erysipelas, can long withstand its influence.

BAD LEGS, OLD SORES, ULCERS, &c.

Cases of many years standing that have pertinaciously refused to yield to any other remedy or treatment, have invariably succumbed to a few applications of this powerful ointment.

Arising from a bad state of the blood or chronic disease, are eradicated, and a clear and transparent surface regained by the restorative action of this Ointment. It penetrates many of the cosmetics and other toilet appliances in its power to dispel rashes and other disfigurements of the face.

Every form and feature of these prevalent and stubborn disorders is eradicated locally and entirely by the use of this emollient; warm fomentations should precede its application. Its healthy qualities will be found to be thorough and invariable.

Both the Ointment and Pills will be used in the following cases:

Bunions,	Skin Diseases,
Burns,	Swelled Glands,
Chapped Hands,	Sore Legs,
Chilblains,	Sore, Bronchi,
Fistula,	Sore Heads

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. DECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive patronage, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expense, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

THE PLAYMATE.

The pines were dark on Ramoth's hill,
Their songs were soft and low;
The blossoms in the sweet May wind
Were falling like the snow,

The blossoms drifted at our feet,
The orchard birds sang clear;
The sweetest and the saddest day
It seemed of all the year,

For, more to me than birds and flowers,
My playmate left her home,
And took with her the laughing spring,
The music and the bloom.

She kissed the lips of kith and kin,
She laid her hands in mine;
What more could ask the bashful boy
Who fed her father's kine?

She left us in the bloom of May;
The constant years told o'er
Their seasons with as sweet May morns,
But she came back no more.

I walk, with noiseless feet, the round
Of uneventful years;
Still o'er and o'er I sow the spring
And reap the autumn ears.

She lives where all the golden year,
Her summer roses blow;
The dusky children of the sun
Before her come and go.

There happily with her jewelled hands
She smooths her silken gown,—
No more the homespun lap wherein
I shook the walnuts down.

The wild grapes wait us by the brook,
The brown nuts on the hill,
And still the May-day flowers make sweet
The woods of Follymill.

The lilies blossom in the pond,
The birds build in the tree,
The dark pines sing on Ramoth hill
The slow song of the sea.

I wonder if she thinks of them,
And how the old time seems,—
If ever the pines of Ramoth wood
Are sounding in her dreams.

I see her face, I hear her voice;
Does she remember mine?
And what to her is now the boy
Who fed her father's kine?

What cares she that the crickets build
For other eyes than ours,
That other hands with nuts are filled,
And other laps with flowers?

O playmate in the golden time!
Our mossy seat is green,
Its fringing violets blossom yet,
The old trees o'er it lean.

The winds as sweet with birch and fern,
A sweeter memory blow;
And there in spring the vireles sing.
The song of long ago.

And still the pines of Ramoth wood
Are moaning like the sea,—
The moaning of the sea of change
Between myself and thee!

A Perilous Hour.

I was apprenticed to a decorative painter; but being of a bold, danger-loving turn, I ran away to sea before my time was out.

After some years of knocking about I got tired of a maritime life, and having married and determined to stick to the shore, I got work with a builder whose peculiar line lay in erecting tall chimneys. I had always a very cool head, and could stand on elevations that made most men dizzy, and so I was soon a favorite hand with my master.

We had on one occasion to fasten a lightning conductor which had sprung near the top of a very high chimney, and Mr. Stanning chose myself and one Jas. Colly to do it, as the most daring of his men.—About a half a dozen of us went that morning with a hand-cart, containing the necessary ropes, blocks, the kite, and a box or cradle. Having flown the kite, and dropped its line across the top of the chimney, we soon drew up a rope, at the end of which was a block, through which ran the line whereby we were to be drawn up.

Colly had only been married a fortnight; and as we stepped into the cradle he was hesitatingly asked him if he hadn't a last dying speech to leave for his wife; and then Mr. Stanning having shaken hands with us and bid us be cool and steady, we were drawn up. It was known all over the town that the conductor was to be fixed, though as the day was not named I did not expect we should have had many spectators; but as we got higher, and the view opened under our feet, I saw that the streets were thronged with starers. Colly was very quiet; and when I waved my cap to the people, he said, complainly, that this was no time for such folly, and that he thought I might think of better things than how to amuse those gaping fools, who, he dared say, deserved no better fun than to see us meet with an accident.

I had come up in the best humor, thinking indeed, nothing at out the dangerous ascent; but as we drew nearer and nearer the top, and had nothing as it seemed, belonging to this world near to us but this straining rope, I began to see the peril of the undertaking. What Cooley thought of I don't know, he sat at the bottom of the cradle, never looking out, though I told him he would do better to keep his eyes about him, as that he might grow used to the height.

Good Heavens! what was this? Here we were within a yard of the top projecting coping, and still they were whirling away without slacking speed in the least! I guessed in a moment that they mistook our height, and that with the great purchase of that machine the rope would be broken when the cradle came to the block. I gave up, and catching the rope, climbed hand over hand to the coping. Cooly, too spoke up and followed me. He too got safe, and still they went on winding up, till the rope came again with the strain there was upon it.

Then it snapped, and cradle, block, line and the ends ropes with it, fell down. There were two very poor men left in the most desperate situation.

Poor Colly was completely dazed with affright and the moment he got on the coping which was only a foot and a half broad, he called out, "where can I pray?" And so I said, very solemnly, "Sit down Jack; God will hear us if we pray to him sitting down."

The color of his face was of a transparent blue; and it was distorted and twitched as if he was in a fit. His eyes were quite wild, and drawn into a squint, and he could not sit steady, but swayed his body backward and forward, so that I felt certain that he must topple over.

"Come, Jem, lad," I said, thinking to take the fright off him; "it's bad enough but it can't be mended. Hitch up a bit, and put your arm around the rod—maybe it will steady you."

"Where are you? and where is this rod?" he asked in a very hollow voice, though he was looking straight at me, and the rod was only a foot or two to his left By this I knew that he was gone blind with the fright; and self preservation said, don't go near him; but then I remembered his new-wedded wife, and that taking him all through, he was a very decent fellow; and I thought how I should have liked him to have done if I had been in his case; so I determined to run a bit of a risk in his favor. Of course I durst not go on my feet; but worked myself on by my hands I got to him, and putting my arm round the rod. I had, however, sprung the stapling for yards down, and was so loose that it swayed with him, and I expected any minute to see him falling head and heels down, and the rod tearing away with him.

There was a great bustle down below; people were rushing round the yard, and rushing to get in, but as yet there were but some score of men at the foot of the chimney, and by close looking, I saw them put somebody on a board and carry him gently away towards the engine house. One of the men followed after with a hat in his hand; then I knew that somebody had been hurt with the falling cradle, and that it must be poor Mr. Stanning, as none of our men wore hats. Not a face was turned up to us. I learned afterwards that our men were so taken up with sorrow that so good a man and so kind a master should be killed, that for a while they never tho't about us, and the people outside imagined that we had come down with the cradle; so time were we left for full twenty minutes.

While I was watching them below, feeling very sorry for my poor master, I was startled by a wild laugh from Colly, who began making cat-bells, and yelling as if he was crazed. Then I knew, of course, that he was gone mad.

Even now I tremble when I think of that time. It was horrible to peer down the shaft, black and sooty and yawning, and see a flight of pigeons sweeping round at considerably less height than we were. Then Colly—thank God, he was so dazed that he could not see—called my name three times as I sat fairly cringing in dread that his sight might clear, and with a ghastly grin, and chewing with his mouth, he began working himself toward me. I worked away from him as noiselessly as I could, with every hair of my head standing on end. He followed me twice round the horrid coping, making most hideous noises, and then, being come a second time to the rod, he got an idea in his muddled head that I had fallen over; for he never lost a sense of where he was all through this trying time. Then he tried to get on his feet; but, at the risk of my own life, I could not let the poor fellow rush on certain ruin without one more effort, and I ordred for him to sit down, and he cowered down like a whipped dog, all trembling. I suppose it had been put into his head that I was a dead man speaking to him.

That morning my wife had got a letter from her sister in Canada, and as there was parts that we could a make out, I had put it into my pocket, intending to get our time-keeper to read it for me. It has a scrap of uncovered paper at the bottom; and by another good providence I happened to have a bit of red-head pencil in my pocket. I wrote on the paper, "Get us down—Colly's gone mad." This I shot in my tobacco box, and was fortunate enough to drop it at the feet of a couple of men who were standing by the engine-house door.

Directly all was bustle to rescue us. They got the kite up again, and I watched it mounting slowly—slowly; and when the check twine fell between Colly and myself, I took it in my hand and could have blessed it. Poor Colly, with his teeth chattering, still fancied I was a spirit, and I did all I could to favor that idea until they got another cradle up to us. Then having got him in I scrambled in myself, and clutching him fast, I shouted for them to lower; and so we were got down, he wrestling and fighting with me all the way.

He was in the mad-house for some months and then went to scavengering, for he never had the nerve clear head since that adventure.

ANECDOTES OF DANIEL WEBSTER.

Daniel Webster when a boy liked reading a great deal better than work, and sometimes endeavored to avoid working with great ingenuity. His father, once going from home for a day or two, charged his son Ezekiel to hoe potatoes, and told Daniel to help Zeke. Ezekiel, absorbed in study and play, neglected the potatoes, and when his father returned and asked him what he had been doing, replied very sheepishly,

"Nothing, sir."

"What have you been doing, Dan?"

"Helping Zeke, as you told me, sir."

Here is another story of the same boy Daniel:

During one of the College vacations he and his brother returned to their father's, in Salisbury. Thinking he had a right to some return for the money he had expended on their education, the farmer put carpetbag into their hands, and ordered them to mow. Daniel made a few awkward strokes then resting on his scythe wiped the sweat from his brow. His father, said:

"What's the matter, Dan?"

"My scythe don't hang right, sir," he answered.

His father fixed it, and Dan went to work again, but with no better success.—Something was the matter with his scythe—and it was not long before it wanted fixing again; his father said in a gruff:

"Well, hang it to suit yourself."

Daniel with much composure, hung it on the next tree, and putting on a very grave countenance said:

"It hangs very well, now, Pa; I'm perfectly satisfied."

COURTING OF A SHARP BUSINESS MAN.

Pitts is a fast man, sharp man, a man of business tact, and when Pitts goes into a store to trade he always buys at the lowest cash price, and he says:

"Well, I'll look about, and if I don't find anything that suits me better, I'll call and take this."

Pitts, like all fast men is partial to women, and young ones in particular. Now, quite lately, Pitts said to himself:

"I am getting rather long in years, and I guess I'll get married."

His business qualities would not let him wait, so off he travels, and calling upon a lady friend, opened the conversation by asking what she thought of getting married.

"Oh, Mr. Pitts, that is an affair in which you know I am not very greatly interested, and I prefer to leave it to yourself."

"But," says Pitts, "you are interested, my dear girl, will you marry me?"

The young lady blushed very red; hesitated, and finally, financially and politically of good standing in society, she accepted him. Whereupon the matter of fact Pitts responded,

"Well, well, I'll look about and if I don't find anybody to suit me better than you I'll come back!"

TAKING A SHOWER BATH.

Doctor—"Well, how did your wife manage her shower bath, deacon?"

Deacon—"She had real good luck. Mrs Moody told her how she managed. She said she had a large oiled silk cap, with a cape to it, like a fireman's, that came all over her shoulders, and——"

Doctor—"She's a fool for her pains; that's not the way."

Deacon—"So my wife thought——"

Doctor—"Your wife did nothing of the sort I hope?"

Deacon—"O, no doctor, she used an umbrella."

Doctor—"What! used an umbrella!—Zounds, what good did the shower bath do her?"

Deacon—"She said she felt better. Her clothes wasn't wet a mite. She sat under the umbrella for half an hour, till the water had trickled off, and said 'twas cool and delightful, and just like a little shower in the summer."

A MAN BURNED AT THE STAKE IN TEXAS.

BUCHANAN, TEXAS, April 25th, 1860.

Allow me a place in your columns for the following recital of a tale of horror; but one of many of which this section of our country is the theatre, but which for obvious reasons are kept out of public prints; and especially out of those honest and patriotic sheets which would hold them up in their true colours to the destination of an enlightened people.

A young man, whose name and residence I shall suppress for fear of harrowing the feelings of a fond mother and sisters to whom "ignorance is bliss," came into this country as a "colporteur:" he had a valuable stock of maps, books, &c., consisting mainly of Bibles and religious works, the standard of the Christian work, histories, (Prescott's and others,) school books and atlases, and unfortunately for him, a few copies of the "Impending Crisis," and some tracts favoring the cause of freedom.

These were accidently seen by some intense pro-Slaveryite, who raised the hue-and-cry against the "d—d Yankee Abolition Book Pedlar." A mob soon had him in their clutches, and he was at once unmercifully flogged, and robbed of his waggon and its contents. Here, perhaps, the affair would have ended, but just at this juncture a negro man was brought upon the ground, purporting to have been caught running away from master with a forged fire pass in his pocket, he, the negro was then lashed to a tree, and after a most barbarous beating he was told to say who had given him the pass. The half-dead and terrified negro, glad of a chance to save himself, and well knowing who his captors wished him to accuse, pointed out the colporteur, adding also, in answer to artful questions, that he had received a knife from the pedlar, with the advice to take it and cut his way to freedom, and to burn his master's house over his head in revenge for the barbarous treatment he had received.—Now of all this there was no proof but the word of the negro, who would have told anything to procure his own pardon; and yet it was enough for the infuriated mob, now numbering about 150 owners of slaves, their overseers and sons.

After a short consultation, the poor man was delivered into the hands of six of the most furious of the crowd. These rolled the waggon under a tree, covered it over with dry faggots, and over the whole of it poured a barrel of tar; having first stripped their victim and immersed him in the same, they passed a rope around his neck and over a limb. Then raising him at that his then lonely convicted foe, by all the combustible pile, the negro was made apply the flaming torch, and thus the fearful tragedy closed in the ruins of the hellishly constructed funeral pile, and the shrieks of the agonized victim.

In justice to outraged humanity, I must say that this was witnessed by those who would have had it otherwise, but too few to avail aught against the infuriated mob.

ESSAYS.—We throw open our columns to the students of compositions, believing this to be one of the best means of encouraging a taste for literature, and the developing of native talent. We will be happy to receive contributions from our readers and the public, and articles will always find a willing place in our columns, subject of course to our judgment and pleasure. Below is a well-written production by a youthful aspirant:—

For the Examiner,

ON THE STUDY OF THE WORKS OF GOD.

By the above title we designate what is sometimes called (though erroneously) the works of nature, (for nature is not a cause but an effect) and they constitute the most ancient volume of information, that has ever been opened for the inspection of men.—Long ere the art of Printing was invented, or man had learned to engrave on rock, or write on the leaves of trees, "The Book of Nature" was opened to his wondering eye covered with the parentings of the Deity. But the antiquity of Creation does not take away its attractiveness. To man it is ever fresh and ever new. The lapse of ages neither withers its beauty nor dims its glory; it has lost none of its power to kindle brightness in the eye, and to wake up joy in the heart of the student, by its wondrous scenes and multiform productions. The poorest of mankind, as well as the titled aristocrat, have a property in the green earth, and the blue sky, coextensive with personal liberty; and in the scenery of the one, and the sublimity of the other, it is their privilege to find the fountains of rational delight. Every thing in and around us bears the impress of Divinity, and is calculated to give solid pleasure and real enjoyment.

The most obvious feature of Creation is variety. If we survey the heavenly bodies we find they do not present to the dim distance a uniform appearance. They all differ. Some are remarkable for softness, others for radiance. Here a lonely orb glows out in peerless brightness; there a multitude cluster so closely, that to the naked eye they seem to melt into a mystic sea of light. Turn to earth, and what great wonders does it not present to the eye of the student, mountains and plains, hills and valleys, lakes, rivers and water-falls, forests and luxriant landscapes meet the vision, and charm the heart. In a selected locality, the upland, the dell, and the streamlet, the ancient oak, and the tender saplings, the wheat-field, the meadow, and the garden, present the most pleasing combinations imaginable. Even the sandy desert has its rocks, and verdant patches, and refreshing waters to relieve it a painful dreariness. The productions of the earth are commerable and vary with the seasons, and the climes in which they grow. Necessaries, comforts, and luxuries, abound to gratify the desires, and refresh the spirits, and to renovate the physical energies of mankind.

Vastness is another of the remarkable characteristics of creation. Among trees the cedars of Lebanon have long been famed for size; but the withering breath of time is reducing their number. The Bible speaks of them in the language of poetry, and travellers of every nation have written of them. Among caverns, the Peak of Derbyshire and Frederickshall in Scandinavia, have delighted thousands, and created in the mind of the observer sensations of awe and wonder. But the minuteness of the works of Creation presents a singular contrast to its vastness. The solid earth upon which we dwell is composed of exceedingly diminutive atoms. The vast ocean, also is composed of small globules, every one of which is a world in miniature. How any one can doubt the existence of a great first cause, and this too amidst the wide-spread wonders of the universe, is indeed a riddle. The Atheists of a former age, such as Voltaire and some of their successors, in this, such as the reputed author of the "Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation," seemed to have been deprived of the use of their eyes, for had they not, they never would have written as they have done. Logical their writings are not; and sneering declamation is a thing they all excel in. Paley says, "wherever there is design there must be a designer," and this is displayed in all the works of God. In the great out of the forest whose top points to Heaven, as well as in the daisy that carpets the sod, the beauty of whose tint, cast into the shade the mightiest efforts of earth's greatest painters. "The fool hath saith in his heart, there is no God." How true the language of inspiration, and really none but a fool could e'er give utterance to such a sentiment.

In conclusion, every department of Nature, (and knowledge) is self rewarding. To aim at acquiring knowledge ought to be the object of every human being, preferring the real and the useful to the trivial and the frivilous! To entertain the notions that have led to great actions, and great events, such as the patronizing and love of country of a Milton, contrasted with the selfishness and inordinate ambition of a Napoleon, is indirectly profitable to wading through realms of fiction and romance. Let young men channel the navel with its (often) impure scenes and false pictures of human life; though a Scott or a James have written them, and read in their stand works of a more solid and elevating cast. The world is full of the beautiful, and the useful, and a wide invitation is given to call the one and to entwine the other. Variety and beauty is present everywhere, and he who loves knowledge will find flowers strewn on his path, whether his aim be to be visit the Falls of Niagara or the Pyramids of Egypt.

RHYMES FOR LITTLE POLITICIANS.

BY SIR. SYLLABUS.

Who killed Cock Bronze?
I said Foley—a dead just and lady
I killed Cock Bronze.

Who saw him die?
I saddowned Connor,
(Smiling) I did an my knee;
I saw him die.

So we'll go on living and saying our prayers
For Georgy is dead and nobody cares.

LESSONS OF THE PRIZE RING.

[From the London Saturday Review.]

The Home Secretary has given a sensible and practical answer to the clamorous that the law did not interfere more decisively to prevent the great prize-fight. He says, in substance, that men will fight, and therefore it is well to teach them how to fight fairly, and then in the function of the prize-ring. Respectable and fashionable people cannot alter human nature by advertising their eyes in pious horror from proceedings which the mass of the working population, and of the sportsmen and soldiers of the country, regard with eager interest. Even in "Discussion Forums" the pretensions of Sayers and Heenan to the belt have been debated by the orators who worshiped the so-called heroism of Orsini. Surely this is again to civilization. If you were to inquire throughout England, you would find that, whenever you get among men of active habits, hardy frames, and ready courage, here existed a disposition to uphold prize-fighting. If you looked along the front of a regiment on parade and picked out the smartest soldier you could see there, you would discover by a few questions that he took an intelligent interest in the battle for the champion's belt. It is one way of dealing with this wide-spread taste for boxing to deny its general existence, and to denounce its unsatisfactions. Another, and perhaps a better way, to endeavor to regulate and improve a practice which we cannot extirpate. Nothing is more certain than that the passion for sports which many worthy people call coarse and brutal and barbarous is a principal characteristic of the classes from which the ranks of the British army are chiefly drawn. It is all very well to picture to the mind a soldier, intelligent, gentle, good and brave, but that is not the sort of stuff out of which you can raise regiments. Such a man may be found here and there. The body of the men are composed of men rather dull of apprehension rather rough in manner, not better than they should be in conduct, and with tempers that may be best described by the oft-repeated comparison to the bull-dog. Perhaps the picture we have drawn is not a pretty one, but the men who might have sat for it are simply the finest soldiers in the world.—Such men love prize-fighting, and their fathers and brothers whom they left at home love it also, and social philosophers may as well recognize this feature of the national character, and consider how to turn it to the best account.

Some persons there are who admit the importance of the art of self-defence, and yet shrink from the violence of the prize-ring. The decorous compromise adopted by such persons consists in approving the great sparring with padded gloves, but condemning downright hard hitting with the naked fists. But among the lower classes, the number of persons who would spar without desiring to fight forms a minority so insignificant as that of the gentle and intellectual soldiers in the British army. The truth is that sparring, if it be not backed upon as a preparation for possible fighting, is a mere sham; and, unless it be in the commercial world, shams are not popular in this country. We believe that the true reason why fencing is so little practised by Englishmen is that it is a mere rehearsal, and that the actual performance never comes. But if a couple of boxers, gentle or supple, get tired of using the gloves, they may take them off, just, as Mr. Swivveller says, "to make things more real and pleasant;" and they are not likely to do each other any injury which time and a few simple remedies will not set right. It is true that some days after the fight they will make such ugly figures that they must keep indoors for fear of shocking a humane public with their battered and discolored visages; but if they would faintly and remotely imitate in their ordinary lives the rules and diet and exercise which are the religion of the prize-ring, they would speedily attain to some conception of that pure and healthy state of body in which great exertion and violent injuries may be sustained almost without perceptible effect. Nothing is more remarkable about the fight than the slight impression produced upon one at least of the combatants by so many severe blows. As Sayers was so much shorter than Heenan, he had no chance of touching him without coming fairly within the range of his long arm; and whenever he did so, that arm was shot out at him with unfailing vigor, and almost the only choice Sayers had was whether he should take the blow upon his arm or in his face. His arm was injured in stopping those repeated blows, and made time must elapse before it will get well.—The blows which he did not stop with his arm of course took effect upon his countenance; and yet any one who saw him right and forty hours after the fight would scarcely have guessed, except from his damaged arm, that it had taken place. Now, this is a fact which is perfectly attested, and which deserves attentive consideration. It must be owned that some of us are likely to appear in the prize-ring, but it may happen to the most loathsome and refined of men to get bruised in a railway carriage, or bashed by a horse, or pricked by the ornate bayonet of a brother-patriot at the volunteers' drill. Well, then if such a calamity were to occur to one who was leading an ordinary London life, he would not recover from its effects by any means so rapidly as Sayers did from his predicament by Heenan. It is the simple truth that prize-fighters show us the way in which we should do well to walk. Their training is nothing more or less than hearing Nature free to do her work unhindered by intemperance, or sloth, or excessive mental labor. In ancient times crowns were almost without hospitals, but the soldiers, as may suppose, were in as good condition as the modern prize-fighters. Pugilism, gymnastics, and any was the only surgery, and if these were neither unnecessary nor injurious, as another generation regards anesthetics, or another generation regards vaccination, we should have the pathology of surgery greatly simplified, and the number of surgeons greatly diminished. It is certainly a curious fact that the only persons who seem to make habitual athletic exercises and do well to act upon the principle to which Bayard and Heenan owed their wonderful power of endurance. It is true, first we do not all live, like the prize-fighters, by our exertions. But the very men who have made an efficient combination play, [illegible] in the training man of Liverpool, [illegible] year, a steady-handed mercantile [illegible] companion, and, in course of years, a [illegible] old age of which death will hardly get the better.

There is one point on which perhaps the enemies of prize-fighting think even stronger than they have need to do, and that is the repulsive aspect of the combatants after they have been well battered. But this appears at the most others, has two sides to it. Most of us at some time or other must, as a matter of duty, or as an act of friendship or affection, familiarize ourselves with spectacles which at first sight inspire us with disgust and horror. Those who looked for the first time the body of a fellow-man injured and bleeding are apt to be so overcome by their emotions as to be incapable of rendering any useful service. The [illegible] which is practically valuable is not the which shrinks appalled from the sight of wounds and blood, but that which, [illegible] horror, and cries of pain is capable of remembering what to do, and of doing it with firm nerve and head. Immunity [illegible] this practical character is quite likely to have been found at the ring-side yesterday the battle between Sayers and Heenan. But the superior considerations which [illegible] checked at the details of a prize-fight perfectly consistent with coldness and callousness; and if courage dwells in the same breast with it, we should fear that it is but the courage of Hotspur's fop, who,

but for the vile guns,
Would himself have been a soldier.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 20.

Suppose 295 as the number of eggs the woman had at starting. ½ of 295 is 147½ 148 being sold to first guard—deduct the 148 from 295, there will be 147 remaining. ½ of 147 is 73½, 74 being sold to the second guard; again deduct the 74 from 147 and 73 remain; the ½ of 73 is 36½, 2 being sold the 3d, which takes from 73 leaves three dozen the answer.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 2.

One half and one third when added together are equal to 5-6ths, making 30 miles equal to one-sixth; then multiply 20 by 6 makes 120 miles. Proof:—1st day, 20 miles; 2nd day, 40 miles; 3rd day, 60 miles. Total 120 miles.

R. S. Nethercot—Your solution is correct, but as they are same as Mr. Dunbar's we do not publish them.

Solutions to Problems 21 and 22 received from Thos. White, South Dover. Answer same as given above by Mr. Dunbar.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 23.

Let X equal the number of persons sixteen in the boat,
Y equal the number of intruders,
Z the time the last man was in the water,
X : X = Y : 1 : : 5
5X = 4X + 4Y
X = 4Y
5Y equal the total on the boat.
22Y equal the number that got out without help,
6Z-3 equal the number helped out, also the common ratio,
25-6 Y = Z-3 = 6Y
20Y = 2Z = 20Y
2Z = 3Y
Z = 5Y
Again X : X = Y = 9 : : 6 : 9
5X = 4X + 4Y = 16
X 4Y = 16
5Y = 20 = 16Y = (twice the common ratio),
20 Y = 120 = 16Y
20 Y = 120
Y = 6 = the number of intruders,
4 Y = 24 = the number of passengers at first,
Z = 5Y = 15 = the number of minutes the last man was in the water,
22 Y = 22 = the number that got out without help,
Therefore 5 equal the number helped out.

There is a difficulty in arranging type so as to form the safest required positions in a problem like the above; a fact which our mathematical contributors would do well to study. The simpler the form the better chances of an insertion. Many solutions we receive are not deserving the space which they take up in our columns; [illegible] a fair exception. No 16 was a [illegible] and Mr. Ford's solution proves [illegible] to be a mathematician of no mean order. THE GREAT FIGHT.

Contest for the Belt.—Proceedings in Court:

FAILURE OF THE BRITISH CONSTITUTION TO ENFORCE THE RULES OF INTERNATIONAL COMITY.

The arrival of the Asia places us in possession of the following report of some very extraordinary legal proceedings before the Queen's Bench in London, arising out of the great fight. A rule nisi, calling on Mr. Dowling, the referee, to show cause why a mandamus should not issue directing him to deliver the champion's belt to John C. Heenan, was obtained by Mr. Edwin James, Q. C., some weeks ago, and the matter came up for argument the day before the steamer left Southampton, before Lord Chief Justice Campbell and a full bench. The Court was thronged to suffocation, not only by the sporting fraternity, but by the most distinguished members of all the professions. Amongst those who were accommodated with seats on the bench, our reporter noticed Mr. Gladstone, Lord Palmerston, Archbishop Whately, Geo. Wilkes, Esq., the Duke of Argyle, Alfred Tennyson, Jack Macdonald, the Duchess of Sutherland, Lady Ellesmere, Mr. Dallas, Mr. Stuart Mill, the political economist, and several others of equal respectability. In fact, the extreme politeness of the Judges was the means of subjecting themselves to considerable inconvenience, as their lordships could with difficulty use their pens.—There was a very large attendance of the bar. Mr. Edwin James, Q. C., Mr. Seaville, Q.C., Mr. Rounell Palmer, Q. C., and Sir Richard Bethell, appeared for the Benicia Boy; the Attorney and Solicitor General, Sergeant Wilkins, and Mr. Robinson, Q. C., for the Referee. Tom Sayers, Mr. Dowling, and one of his seconds, were in Court, but not beside the Attorney General as the lamb bar.

Mr. Edwin James, in support of his rule, said it was unnecessary to dwell upon the importance of the question which their lordships were asked to decide. A matter which for months had been the sole topic of conversation in every Anglo-Saxon household, and had awakened the wildest emotions in the breasts of nearly seventy millions of the most highly civilized people on earth—and which had kindled an amount of excitement in England such as had not been witnessed since the great day on which the Seven Bishops had been arraigned in that venerable hall, was not a matter which could derive illustration for so humble an individual as himself. He was there to argue and not declaim; though if declamation was necessary, heaven knows he was not the man to shrink from it. But fortunately, perhaps, for all concerned, his client needed no rhetorical display to make clear his right to the exercise of the enlightened discretion of the Court in his behalf. That client, he was proud to say, was the Benicia Boy,—(slight applause, which was instantly suppressed,) a gentleman of the highest standing in his own country—six feet two or thereabouts—his learned friends on the other side would correct him if he was wrong. He had come here to fight for the "Champion's Belt," an article with which their lordships were, doubtless, perfectly familiar—and, as he believed, and as he was sure he could show to the Court—he had won it, and now asked the Court to put him in possession of it. By the article of agreement, into which his client entered with the late champion, Mr. Thomas Sayers,

[The Attorney-General protested against the use of such language. He asked the Court to protect the learned counsel from such abuse. He begged leave to inform the Chief Justice and gentlemen of the jury that the Queen's Bench would remain so until the Court decided otherwise, or a better shot than Winslow met him in the ring.]

Hostile demonstrations on the part of the Boy, who sat immediately behind the Chief Justice, and was vigorously shaking his "bunch of fives" at the right honorable gentleman over his lordship's head, here brought the proceedings to a sudden stop. Hisses, cheers, and cat-calls, from the lower part of the Court and the back benches of the bar, completely drowned the learned counsel's voice, as well as that of Mr. James, who was making frantic efforts to reply, without any better result than bringing an extraordinary rush of blood into his ordinarily ruddy face. As the excitement increased the Boy rose, a tender a wild spring across the heads of the Judges, but was caught by the coat tails by Mr. Wilkes and Jack Macdonald, and held down to his seat. Lord Campbell called loudly for the Sheriff of Middlesex, and, on that functionary making his appearance, fined him one hundred pounds which was instantly paid—after which the disorder subsided. His Lordship said he had "never before witnessed so scandalous a scene in a Court of Justice—and if it were repeated he would order the room to be cleared," remarks in which Justices Wightman and Earle expressed their concurrence.

Mr. James resumed.—When so contemptuously interrupted by the honorable and learned gentleman, he was about to call the attention of their Lordships to the articles of agreement by which the late fight was arranged.

The Attorney General asked to have the articles produced and proved in the usual manner. The Court knew nothing about them.

Mr. James submitted that the fighting articles in the case of this sort were something of which the Court would take judicial cognizance. He cited the Tipton Slasher vs. Maughan; Paddy O'Halligan vs. The Hampshire Squeezer; Semple vs. The Duke of York.

Lord Campbell, after consultation with the other Judges, said the Court were unanimously of opinion that proof or production of the articles was not necessary. They held the same position as a sporty made by the Crown with a foreign Power. The Court was presumed to have knowledge of them.

Mr. James contended that by their relinquishing it was not argued that the parties should fight on the 16th inst., and, in case of interruption from any cause, should resume within a week. They had fought, and, as he contended, his client was victorious. [The learned counsel here read affidavits as to what occurred in the ring at the close of the contest.] Now, supposing it to be determined by the decision of the Court that the fight was interrupted, could the backing of the article, if it appeared that the fight was able to renew the battle within the time specified, and his opponent was entitled to the stakes? If not, Suppose the fight was not interrupted, then the position in which the English Champion found himself at the close, and the concussion blindness of his face ought to satisfy the Court of his defeat.

Lord Campbell said the order of the fight at the time was not material.

Mr. James desired to call the attention of the Court to the affidavit of Bradley, in the absence of the Queen's Bench Chambers, and that which contained the testimony of Hyer, which was to the effect that Heenan had struck Sayers after he was down.

Lord Campbell, after consulting with his brother Judges, said the Court were unanimously of opinion that proof or production of the articles was not necessary. They held the same position as a sporty made by the Crown with a foreign Power. The Court was presumed to have knowledge of them.

Mr. James contended that by their relinquishing it was not argued that the parties should fight on the 16th inst., and, in case of interruption from any cause, should resume within a week. They had fought, and, as he contended, his client was victorious. [The learned counsel here read affidavits as to what occurred in the ring at the close of the contest.] Now, supposing it to be determined by the decision of the Court that the fight was interrupted, could the backing of the article, if it appeared that the fight was able to renew the battle within the time specified, and his opponent was entitled to the stakes? Mr. James desired to call the attention of the Court to the affidavit of Bradley, in the absence of the Queen's Bench Chambers, and that which contained the testimony of Hyer, which was to the effect that Heenan had struck Sayers after he was down.

Lord Campbell refused, however, to hear him.

Mr. Sleigh followed. He said he appeared for the Saturday Review—a journal which, whenever the honor of England was con—

Lord Campbell—You have no standing in Court.

Mr. Sleigh—I desire to be heard on that point.

Lord Campbell—We cannot hear you.

Mr. Sleigh—I stand on my rights.

Lord Campbell—Then you must stand on them outside. Officer remove him.

Mr. Sleigh was removed accordingly, gesticulating violently, and making desperate attempts to continue his address, the only words which reached us being "John Bright," "Americanization of our institutions"—and "University Education."

The Court, after consultation, was equally divided, and the rule dropped—Justice Wightman being absent. Justice Crampton came into Court after all was over; but nevertheless, following the example of some of our Albany Judges, took part in the decision. He said he had not heard the argument, and knew nothing about the case, but, in his opinion, the rules of justice and comity which should regulate the relations of the two, countries, require that the belt should be given to the Boy. He thought the rule should be made absolute.

After the adjournment of the Court, a meeting of the Americans in London was held at the Blue Boar, in Holborn—Mr. George Wilkes in the Chair—and it was unanimously resolved that the thanks of the United States should be presented to Frederick Smith, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-law, for leading his wig to the Benicia Boy in the Court of Queen's Bench and that a copy of the resolution be sent to his aged mother, in Lincolnshire.

THE SAN JUAN DIFFICULTY.

Mr. S. Fitzgerald asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he was prepared to give the House any information as to the present position of the negociations between this country and the United States with reference to the Island of San Juan; and whether he had any objection to lay the correspondence with the United States Government on that subject upon the table of the House. He wished further to ask, although he had not given notice of his intention to do so, whether the present condition of affairs as to the occupation of, and jurisdiction in, the Island of San Juan, in consequence of the arrangement made with General Scott. He also wished to know whether the noble Lord had received any counter proposition from the United States, and whether he had made any other proposition to the United States in consequence of the compromise which he proposed having been rejected. Would the noble lord also state what was the nature of the compromise that had been rejected by the United States?

Lord John Russell—As to the last question, I cannot properly give an answer at present, for it would not be convenient to explain now the nature of what the honorable gentleman calls the compromise we proposed, which we think was fairly in accordance with the terms of the treaty of 1846. The present state of the question is this;—We made a proposition in August last which was refused by the American Government, they stating over again their claim to the channel which they had originally claimed soon after the treaty. We intended to reply to that, and there was some question whether the American Government would give any reply to our despatch, but the last intelligence I received was, that General Cass expected to receive orders from the President to prepare an answer to our despatch. It depends upon the terms of that answer whether I can lay the correspondence on the table, or whether some further reply on the part of her Majesty's Government will not be necessary. As to the state of the occupation of the island of San Juan, the House is aware that General Harney thought it necessary to place 300 men and a battery of guns on the Island.—General Scott was sent there with orders from the President to use his own discretion on the basis of Mr. Secretary Marcy's despatch, which is well known to all of us.—General Scott, acting in the spirit of that despatch, immediately sent away from the island all but 100 men, and declared that neither party ought to have exclusive jurisdiction while the question was pending. He also sent away the guns, and informed the Governor of Vancouver's Island and our Admiral of what he had done. The Governor of Vancouver's Island did not consider himself authorized to enter into any compromise or agreement with General Scott, not having any orders from Home. Orders have since been sent from England to land 100 marines—the same number of men as the United States had on the island. We sent at the same time to him to act in accordance with what the American Government had declared, that there should be no exclusive jurisdiction in the island. There has been some doubt in the mind of the Governor of Vancouver's Island whether we should have a magistrate on the island, but it might create confusion. How that has been decided I cannot say, but, such was the state of affairs at the date of my last intelligence.

A very singular experiment is by custom has been many times repeated in France. It consists in stacking a thalb-like stone a floor, and placing a ton weight book the has been witnessed with cheers at the end of the line, and nearly touching it. She soon shake into the most complete hypnotic sleep, accompanied by insensibility and obedience. By blowing gently on her eyes, she is awakened and immediately shakes herself, then her wings, and runs and runs with much squeaking.

Mr. Fowler, the Postmaster of New York, is said to be a defaulter to the amount of fifty-five thousand dollars. He was a heavy stockholder in the Bowery Bank, which suspended during the Democratic rule, and his defalcations are caused by contributions to insure the election of Mr. Buchanan to the Presidency. Fowler has fled to Canada, the city not his throughout it to capture him.

Quebec Correspondence.

The Convention Resolutions: the new policy of the opposition a moderate one—the Prohibitory bill strangled by the French—a bill to cut off salaries carried—the French pass an Upper Canada bill—the postage question—Prorogation.

Quebec, May 14, 1860.

The debate on the Convention Resolutions came to a close on Tuesday. The vote is accepted by the opposition as very satisfactory—as a new movement it has became wonderfully popular. Representation by Population your readers will recollect was at first supported by a comparatively insignificant number of persons. At the general election of 1857, '58 about 40 Upper Canadians made it the great feature of their creed. When the Convention scheme shall have met with a free and candid examination at the hands of the people of Upper Canada—the people will accept it with greater fervour. It must obtain a larger measure of support from Lower Canada than Representation by Population could ever hope to cause. It is a much more moderate proposition. It concedes equal justice to both sections, gives to each the control of its local affairs, and raises no hostility by threatening the subjugation of one people to the peculiar views of the other. The determining the relative powers of the local and general government must under such a scheme be left to the principle as conceded. It is no left under the government scheme of general confederation. Foley and Connor have voted for the Resolutions of the Convention. Their unfortunate course has been productive of great injury to the opposition, but if they are disposed to amend they should not be too harshly dealt with. Their political influence is forever gone. The prohibitory bill introduced by Malcolm Cameron, and applicable to Upper Canada only, has met with most shabby treatment. It was thrown out in committee, on Saturday. Eight Upper Canada traitors aided 27 Frenchmen in this dastardly proceeding.

A bill introduced by Simpson, of Niagara, by which saloon licenses are to be cut off when they expire, and the number of taverns in municipalities is to be limited to one for every 250 people became law. This will reduce the number of taverns in towns and cities to some extent. You will be able to say here it would effect your town if only four taverns were granted to every 1000 inhabitants, and the saloons cut off entirely. It will work a slight reform, and we must be thankful for small favors from the French, who of course do not know what we require.

The school bill for Upper Canada has been carried by the aid of Cartier's brigade. John A. McDonald struck out all the provisions, first that relate to Grammar Schools, and he entreated the opposition to swallow the disgusted details of the bill. The opposition members have hardly heard from their friends in relation to the bill. It appears to be generally condemned however. They asked that it should be delayed till next session, but Cartier refused, and he voted Upper Canada down.

The question of the seat of government has been up again, but the opposition refused to disturb the existing settlement.

It is thought the Homestead bill will be carried through the Lower House and be lanched in the Upper House. This it is said is a dodge intended by the government to deceive the people. They have prepared a train for the measure and will apply the match at the proper time.

The opposition intend to try and get a vote on the newspaper postage question before the prorogation of Parliament and the division is likely to be close. Had the government any regard for public opinion this obnoxious tax would be expunged. They have not however. They desire to shackle the press.

Prorogation is expected on Friday next, Thursday is a holiday.

PARLIAMENT

Was prorogued on Saturday last. The following Bills passed during the Session, received the Royal assent, and will immediately become law:—

An Act to incorporate the St. George's Society of Montreal.

An Act to amend the Act intituled, "An Act to incorporate the village of New Hamburg, in the county of Waterloo."

An Act to consolidate the debt of the town of Beauharnois.

An Act to amend this Act for the incorporation of the International Bridge Company.

An Act to incorporate the college of Three Rivers.

An Act to provide for the payment of certain compensations, in the United Counties of Northumberland and Durham, in which certain granted lands have been constituted by the said United Counties, of a fair amount for the construction of such roads, and to vest the roads in the said municipalities.

An Act respecting trade with foreign countries.

An Act to extend the periods allowed to the Montreal Telegraph Company for extending their Line to the Atlantic Coast and across the Atlantic.

An Act to amend the fourth sub-section of the sixth section of the fifty-fifth chapter of the Consolidated Statutes for Upper Canada, respecting the Assessment of Property in Upper Canada.

An Act to amend the sixth chapter of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, intituled: "An Act respecting Civilization and Enfranchisement of certain Indians."

An Act to enable the Nord City Gas Company of Montreal to increase their capital stock.

An Act to enable the Rector and Churchwardens of the Church of St. Paul, at Woodstock, to sell certain lands belonging to the said church.

An Act to incorporate the South Eastern Mining Company of Canada.

An Act to restrict interments in a certain burial ground in the city of Quebec.

THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION.

The Republican Convention held in Chicago last week came to a close on Friday last. The greatest harmony prevailed throughout the Session. The principal candidates for the Presidency nomination were Seward, Bates, Lincoln, Cameron, Chase and Dayton. On the third ballot Lincoln was nominated over division. The nomination was afterwards made unanimous. Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine, was nominated for the Vice Presidency. The nomination was received with great enthusiasm in many of the States. The following is copied from the Buffalo Express:—

"Abraham Lincoln is one of those noblemen who rank highest among the aristocracy of our Republic—a self-made man of the people, risen from the humblest to the highest of positions, by virtue of his genius and his energy. He was born in [illegible], Kentucky, [illegible] of poverty, [illegible] and humblest rank in life. His advantages of any kind were afforded him in early life, and he entered the world of manhood with a limited education, and the [illegible] occupations of the laboring class. By the [illegible] of the Democratic party, the [illegible] and the progress of humanity and liberty, he is, like [illegible] as a friend, [illegible] and progress. But while engaged in these [illegible] pursuits, he diligently improved the few opportunities which he could for the cultivation of those faculties that gave him higher aspirations, and in due course of time found himself, by self-instruction entirely, for the profession of the Law. He was admitted to the [illegible], and at once settled in the town of [illegible], Illinois, where he has ever since resided. Upon the breaking out of the Black Hawk war in 1832, he was among the first to offer his services, and proved his bravery and efficiency during the brief campaign that followed, at the head of a company who elected him to their command. His political career commenced in the Legislature of Illinois, to which he was four times elected by the Whigs. In 1846, he was elected a member of the XXXth Congress, where he voted with the Whig party; and at the National Convention which nominated Gen. Scott for President, in June, 1852, he was elected to represent Illinois in the Central Whig Committee. He was one of the most powerful and efficient workers of the campaign. In 1856 he was one of the most ardent and earnest supporters that the Republican party had in the field, and won so high a position among the leaders of the new political organization that he was almost unanimously selected in 1858 to bear its standard in the great contest with Douglas."

The platform adopted by the Convention embraced seventeen resolutions, and their contents may be thus briefly stated—

There is a necessity for the Republican party. Its principles are those of the Declaration of Independence, and their maintenance is essential to the preservation of republican institutions in their integrity. The permanency of the Union is essential to the prosperity of the Republic, and those who assail it are abettors of treason, whom the Republicans will always denounce. The rights of states must be maintained inviolate, and invasions of states by armed men, under whatever pretext, are among the gravest of crimes. The present Democratic administration has in many ways grossly abused its power. A radical change in the administration is necessary. The new dogma that the constitution carries slavery into the territories is a dangerous heresy. The normal condition of the territories is freedom, and that condition should be maintained. The execrable slave trade, now being revived, must for the honor of the country be suppressed. Kansas should be admitted as a state, with the constitution her people have adopted. The tariff should encourage domestic industry. The homestead bill should become a law, and appropriations should be made by Congress for harbor and river improvements of a national character. No changes are desirable in our naturalization laws, and adopted citizens equally with native-born should be protected in their rights both at home and abroad. The Federal Government ought to aid in the construction of a Pacific railroad.

THE MAYOR'S COURT.

IMPORTANT DECISION.—John Sullivan was brought up by the License Inspector for selling liquor after 7 o'clock, p. m. on Saturday last.

Thos. Morrow was brought as a witness, who said that he had drank whiskey with some other men between 7 and 8 o'clock at Sullivan's, but that he did not pay for anything. It was a treat by the landlord.

Sullivan showed that the men alluded to were "running the river" and coming in wet to supper, he treated them, and that Morrow, who was not a boarder, got it with them.

The Mayor dismissed the case on the ground that a person having a license to sell liquor, might furnish it to his boarders after 7 on Saturday or on Sunday. The Mayor remarked that the law was made to apply to places where men would be commonly paid their wages on Saturday night, so as that they might not be enticed to spend their earnings in toping. He did not see that difference between Saturday and Friday here, and would therefore look leniantly on this case.

Gabriel Chartain was brought up charged by the License Inspector with selling liquor on Sunday.

George Jenkins swore that he had liquor there, had tendered money for it, which was refused.

Stephen Norton swore that he had called for a glass of beer which was brought to him and which he paid for.

The Mayor said the case was proved and he would impose the lowest penalty, as no complaint of disorder was made. Chartrain was fined twenty dollars and costs.

☞ We are informed that two members of the Council are busy circulating statements to the effect that our report of last week was an incorrect one, and that they were reported to have said things they never made mention of. If the individuals referred to had the manliness to make such assertions in a public manner, we would be able to meet them on public ground. As it is, we hope people will be slow to believe anything they are told in a whisper by the parties referred to. Our report was a correct one, and we defy any member of the Council to prove the contrary. If members of that body are ashamed to see in a public print expressions they can use with impunity in the Council chamber, they at least ought not to add insult to injury by falsifying our reports.

DENTISTRY.—Mr. O'Donnell, of Brockville, has opened an office in Tolpo for the practice of the profession. See advertisement.

EXHIBITION AT THE TOWN HALL,—QUEEN'S BIRTH-DAY.—Whitney, the famous American Magician, performs as above in this place to-night, May 24th. He is an old, experienced and successful performer, and has arrived, it is said, at an astonishing degree of proficiency in the Necromantic art. Besides magical illusions, he performs many scientific experiments of a most wonderful and interesting character, which have been witnessed by thousands in this country, and "all the regions over the border." He gives two entertainments, one at 3 o'clock, and another at 8 o'clock, p. m.

☞ THE Council on Monday night was crowded with spectators. It was known that the Arc principal insurgents, Messrs. Toole, Morrow, Ormond, Walton and O'Beirne, had held a caucus meeting with their friends, and concluded to resign. People flocked to witness their demise. When he they all took their seats and kept them behaving themselves in an humble and proper manner, as they should always have done, considering, as Wm. Arnold says "their deplorable ignorance."

☞ THE shower Ogowan will leave Bridgeworth this (Thursday) morning, on an excursion trip to Fenelon Fall, and return in the evening.

WHOLESALE SEIZURE OF PATENT MEDICINES.—On Saturday having obtained information that a quantity of goods had passed the frontier without paying the duties, Mr. Lamb of this port went to the Railway Station at Shakspeare and succeeded in discovering the contraband property. It consisted of thirteen oblong cases addressed to Middleton labelled "Comstock & Co." The cases in all weighed about thirteen cwt., enough to any event if sold and distributed here to cure or kill every cough, cramp, spasm, fever and influenza patient in the country. To Mr Lamb's vigilance in discovering of this violation of the revenue laws.—St. Catherines Post.

TOWN COUNCIL.

MONDAY, May 21st, 1860.

The Council met. His Worship the Mayor presiding.

Present—Messrs. Toole, Morrow, McDougall, Ormond, Walton, O'Beirne, Chamberlen, Ryan, Harty, Maloney and Wright.

A communication from Mr. Aubin asking leave to lay down pipes for gas in the streets was read and referred to Committee on Public Property.

A communication from Mr. D. Hopkins stating that nearly all the taxes had been collected, and that Mr. Scott had replevied, was read and received.

A petition from John Hodson signed by a number of respectable rate-payers, asking the Council to give him a License was presented.

Mr. Chamberlen moved, seconded by Mr. Ryan,—That the Council do recommend the Inspector to grant Mr. Hodson a License.

Mr. Toole remarked that this was the second or third time Mr. Hodson had applied to the Council for the same purpose, and that although the application this time was respectably signed, he did not think it would justify the Council in interfering between the petitioner and the Inspector of Licenses. If Hodson had the necessary accomodations required by law the Inspector would not withold the license, therefore he would move in amendment that the petition be referred to the License Inspector.

Both motions were negatived.

The Mayor remarked that demands for interest had been made on the Treasurer by the agents of the Commercial and Montreal Banks, and they had been refused payment for lack of funds; he asked the Council to devise some means to satisfy the same.

Mr. Ormond said the Finance Committee had deliberated on the matter, but could arrive at no satisfactory plan for the liquidation of the debt; but thought perhaps his Worship might tell them some way of meeting the difficulty.

The Mayor said he had a plan in view which he thought would meet the emergency: let members of the Council join in obtaining a discount from a bank; the proceeds thereof to satisfy the demand now pressing. This would preserve our credit abroad, although it would place them in the same condition that the parties were now in who held these securities. For his part he was willing to assist all he could.

Mr. Ormond—But as the funds raised for this purpose have been misappropriated, any rate-payer could cause the debt to be repudiated when the members of the Council held the coupons.

The Mayor replied that the debt was a just and legal one, and they could in such a case do what the present holders of the coupons probably will do—sue for it. He was willing to risk the legality of it.

Mr. Chamberlen—Perhaps the Mayor would take the whole responsibility of it on himself, and arrange everything satisfactorily.

The Mayor—I am perfectly willing to join with Mr. Chamberlen in raising the necessary sum.

Mr. Chamberlen—(after considerable hesitation)—You, sir, have had a chance of studying the affair in all its bearings, I have not. I would like to consider it more fully before doing so.

After some further discussion the subject was referred to the Finance Committee.

A communication from Mr. Sergeant of Norwood, showing that he had been appointed Inspector of Weights & Measures and asking that the Town Council would extend his appointment to Peterboro', was read and laid on the table for further consideration.

The Mayor remarked that the Market Tolls had not been sold on Monday last, because the By-law required that six days notice be given in the local newspapers, and as the papers were not published till Thursday and Friday, only four days advertising was the consequence.

Mr. Chamberlen thought there was another confliction in the matter; the By-law required that the Tolls be sold on the first Monday in May; that time had passed and he thought it might render any sale illegal for the remainder of the year. He would like to have the Mayor's opinion.

The Mayor—My opinion is that the Market should be free, and the tempers of farmers visiting the town not soured by grievous exactions.

Mr. Morrow said the consequence of adopting the Mayor's suggestion, would be to have farmers selling all over the town, or else a large police force must be kept up to discover the offenders.

The Mayor said no such consequence need arise; though the Market was free, sellers must still come to it, and if they did'nt a cheap police could always be found in info mers, who would be stimulated by receiving a share of the penalty.

Mr. McDougall thought it did not make a great difference whether the tolls were offered or not; no person would buy there; and if anybody was foolish enough they would have a very bargain.

Mr. Maloney moved seconded by Mr. Wyte.—That the Market be free for the current year excepting for the use of the weigh scales.

Mr. Ryan—Perhaps Mr. Maloney will get us his reasons for making such a motion.

Mr. Maloney—My reasons are very simple the people of the Town are opposed to the collection of tolls, and the temptation caused to country people operates injuriously to the trade of the Town.

Mr. Morrow begged to differ—he believed the ratepayers were perfectly satisfied with the By-law as it was.

Mr. Chamberlen wanted to know what authority the Clerk had for postponing the sale?

The Mayor said he had instructed him. Considerable hot words made of things being done illegally by the late Council, he did not want any such blame to attach to the present one.

Mr. O'Beirne wished the thing dropped till next night when Mr. Maloney might bring in a new By-law.

Mr. Ormond would like to see the Market free, but at the same time thought it ought to be made pay itself; the Town had involved itself in pecuniary difficulty constructing a railroad from which the people in the surrounding townships reaped the most advantage; that they had not given the least aid to the Town in building the railroad, and it was only right to impose a small fee when they came to our market; their trade was scarcely equivalent.

Mr. Maloney would like Mr. Ormond to tell him what Peterboro' would be without the trade of the surrounding townships?

Mr. Toole was in favor of things as they were, and would move in amendment, seconded by Mr. Morrow,—That the Clerk be instructed to sell the Market Tolls by auction, according to the provisions of the By-law, at noon, on the 28th of the month.

The amendment was carried.

The Council then adjourned for one week.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT!!

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH.

ADDRESSES TO THE PRINCE.

QUEBEC, May 19.

ADDRESS TO THE PRINCE.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR ROYAL HIGHNESS

We, the Legislative Council of Canada, in Parliament assembled, approach your Royal Highness with renewed assurance of our attachment and devotion to the person and crown of your Royal Mother, our beloved Queen.

We regret that the duties of State should have prevented Her Majesty from visiting the extensive portion of her vast dominions.

We loyally and warmly appreciate the interest which she manifests in it by deputing to us your Royal Highness as her representative, and we rejoice, in common with all her subjects in this Province, at the presence among us of him, who at some future, but we hope distant day will reign over the realm, wearing with undiminished lustre the crown which will descend to him.

Though the formal opening of that great work, the Victoria Bridge, known throughout the world as the most gigantic effort in modern times of engineering skill, has been made a special occasion of your Royal Highness's visit, and proud as Canadians are of it, we yet venture to hope that you will find in Canada many other evidences of greatness and progress to interest you in the welfare and advancement of your future subjects.

Enjoying under the institutions guaranteed to us by the wisdom of our own affairs, and as British subjects having a common feeling and interest in the fortunes of the Empire, its glories and successes, we trust, as we believe, that the visit of your Royal Highness will strengthen the ties which bind together the Sovereign and the Canadian people.

THIRD READINGS.

The House met to-day at 10 o'clock, when the following Bills were read the third time and passed:—Municipal and Road Act of Lower Canada; Quebec Turnpike Road; Quebec Interments Restriction Amendment; Law against Articles Registriction; Titles to Real Estate Quieting in Upper Canada.

THE PROROGATION.

At 3 o'clock p. m. His Excellency the Governor General proceeded in state to the Chamber of the Legislative Council in the Parliament buildings; the members of the Legislative Council being assembled. His Excellency was pleased to command the attendance of the Legislative Assembly and that House being present, several Bills were assented to in Her Majesty's name by His Excellency the Governor General, after which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the third Session of the Sixth Provincial Parliament with the following

SPEECH.

Hon. Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,—
Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly,—

The time has come when I am able to release you from the labors of the session, and I think that I may express satisfaction at the result of your deliberations.

The prosperity of the country is reviving. The measures which you have sanctioned for extending our trade and facilitating the free navigation of the St. Lawrence, involving as they do some sacrifice, will contribute in the end to increase our resources.

The establishment of a Free Port at the Eastern and at the Western extremity of Canada will attract commerce to our shores, and must hasten the settlement of districts hitherto waste and unproductive.

The fisheries of the Gulf and the mining interests of the Upper Lakes will benefit greatly by these liberal measures.

You have destroyed the last remnants of the Seigniorial Tenure, which remained to a few lots in the district of Montreal.

The Act for improving the Administration of Justice in Lower Canada will cause the expense of jurors to be defrayed from local funds.

This change and the completion of the system of the registration of titles to real estate will have carried to a close for ever the abomination of the laws in force in either section of the province.

I was here dissolved the other day for adding the Consolidated Statutes of Lower Canada to the body of the statutes of Canada and Upper Canada, already consolidated by a separate Act, and you have brought into a more convenient shape the municipal law affecting the eastern province.

"All these late steps tending to strengthen that bond of union which I believe to be essential to the progress and the future greatness of your country.

I should add that the Common School Law of Upper Canada has been amended and improved, and that a bill will be submitted for the assent of Her Most Gracious Majesty, providing for the future administration of lands offices by the Provincial Government. The terms of the enactment are such as to show a desire to uphold the rights and protect the property of those most nearly concerned in it, and I cannot doubt but that, if sanctioned, its provisions will be carried out in perfect good faith by the Executive Government of Canada.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly,—

I congratulate you on the successful steps taken for [illegible] the public debt, and on the [illegible] which has attended the [illegible] of the Province.

I thank you for the supplies which you have granted for public service, and I earnestly hope that the temporary depression of our finances may disappear in the course of the current year.

Honorable Gentlemen and Gentlemen,—

There is one subject on which I have not yet touched, and that is the promised visit to this Province of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. Your invitation has been most graciously responded to by our Queen and your reception of her son will show the warmth of those feelings which dictate the address of last session, and the deep sense of loyalty to the Throne and of love for the laws and institutions of Great Britain, which animate the population of Canada.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

QUEBEC, May 19.

The House met at 11 a. m.

The amendments made by the Council to the various Bills were adopted.

ADDRESS TO THE PRINCE.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR ROYAL HIGHNESS,

We the Legislative Assembly of Canada, in Parliament assembled, approach your Royal Highness with assurance of our devoted attachment and loyalty to the person and crown of our most Gracious Sovereign.

The Queen's loyal subjects in this Province would have rejoiced had the duties of State permitted their august Sovereign to have herself visited their country, she has have received the person in whom both of their devotion to her, and all the sympathies with which they regard the manner in which she administers the affairs of the vast Empire over which it has pleased Divine Providence to place her. That while we cannot refrain from expressing our unfeigned regret that it has proved impossible for our Queen to visit her possessions in Canada, we are deeply sensible of her gracious desire to meet the wishes of her subjects by having permitted them the opportunity of welcoming in this part of her dominions the Heir Apparent of the Throne and of her future Sovereign.

We desire to congratulate your Royal Highness on your arrival in Canada, an event long to be remembered, as manifesting the deep interest felt by the Queen in the welfare of her colonial subjects.

On this auspicious occasion, when for the first time, the Colonies have been honored by the presence of the Heir Apparent, we receive an earnest of the determination of our most Gracious Sovereign to knit yet more closely the ties of affection and duty which unite us to the British Empire, and continue us to share in its liberties, its glories, and its great historical associations.

The approaching opening of the Victoria Bridge by your Royal Highness has given the more immediate cause of your present visit to Canada, and we trust that you will find in that stupendous work the most striking evidence of the manner in which the capital and skill of the Mother Country have united with the energy and enterprise of this Province in overcoming natural obstacles of the most formidable character; but, we trust that as your further progress your Royal Highness will find in the peace and prosperity of the people both their attachment to their Sovereign, the best proof of the strength of the ties which unite Canada to the Mother Country, and of the mutual advantages to the Empire and to the Colony, from the perpetuation of a connection which has been fraught with such great and beneficial results.

We pray that your Royal Highness may be pleased to convey to our most gracious Queen the feeling of love and gratitude with which we regard her rule, and especially of her condescension in affording us this occasion of welcoming your Royal Highness as the Prince of Columbia.

The House was summoned to attend in the Council Chamber at two o'clock, when the prorogation took place.

A PROTESTANT HIERARCHY.

Our attention has been called by the proceedings of the Methodist General Conference, now in session in this city, to somewhat of an anomaly in Protestant jurisprudence. Our readers cannot have failed to notice in the reported proceedings of the body, that a large number of memorials have been presented referring to the subject of a lay delegation. The government of the Church is now a pure hierarchy, the entire management of its temporal as well as its spiritual affairs, being in the hands of the clergy, where it has remained ever since its organization. For several years the question of having a lay representation has been agitated, but thus far the reform demanded has been successfully resisted. The pressure, however, at the present moment, is so great, that the Bishops in their recent quadrennial address found it necessary to concede the principle but urged that in case of its adoption the registrations should consist of a separate body after the manner of the Almoners of Delegates of the Episcopal Church. There is no doubt that in this connection there is a serious defect in the temporal economy of the Church which should be corrected.—There is a force in the arguments

THE PRIZE FOR THE CHAMPIONSHIP.

A letter from Sayers to the editor of the Times says:—

Sir,—The period has arrived when it becomes my duty to thank the great British publics for the patronage they have bestowed on me. It is not for me to pass any remarks upon my late struggle when the new world was pitted against the old, but one thing I can say in honesty, I did my best for the land of my birth and dearest associations. I had opponent to me one worthy of one, and whose activity, rapidity and pluck were no small task to encounter. Spring from one own race, the Americans inherit some best qualities, and as our conflicts with them have in the progress of time ended in peace, so may every bitterness engendered by the late struggl for the Championship pass away forever. Upon my own part and that of my children, I humbly offer to you my most grateful thanks, and I trust in whatever period Providence may extend my life, that the act of mine, either in private or public will be unworthy of one who has reserved notice in the Times newspaper.

PARIS, May 5.—The Patrie believes itself correct in stating that no decision has yet been taken relative to the evacuation of Rome.

The same paper says: "It is asserted that Marshal M'Mahon will take the command of the camp of Chalons at the beginning of June next."

PARIS, May 8.—The Moniteur of today announces that a decree modifying the project of law concerning sugar and coffee has been submitted to the Legislative Body.

A notice has been posted up at the Bourse stating that the Caisse des Depots et des Consignations will continue to buy 427,200f. of Rente stock per day until the 7th of June.

The correspondent of the Morning Post says: A very extensive and fragmented camp in forming at Chalons." There is to be a grand review this year.

Preparations are being made at Toulon and Marseilles to receive the siege artillery of the army of Italy, originally intended to reduce the strong places of Venetia.

GARIBALDI'S EXPEDITION TO SICILY.

The Patrie of the 8th says:

General Garibaldi's departure for Sicily has been fully confirmed. He left during the night from the 5th to the 6th inst. The Piedmontese Government had ordered all arms and ammunitions which had been deposited at Quarto, near Genoa, to be seized, and had also given orders for the port of Genoa to be watched. The expeditionary vessel, which had taken her papers for Malta, had put out to sea two days previously. General Garibaldi joined the vessel immediately afterwards, and she, instead of proceeding to Malta, went to Sicily. The Piedmontese Government made every possible protest against this act of General Garibaldi, which may involve the new Italian state in serious difficulties. General Garibaldi, being in connection with the committee in London undertaking the collection of English subscriptions for Sicily, had, in order to replace the arms which he feared would be seized by the Sardinian Government, removed others which had not passed through Piedmont. The Opinione Nationale says:—The different vessels belonging to Garibaldi's expedition will muster off the island of Capraja; they will then direct their course towards Sicily. The Patrie adds—General Garibaldi by acting thus commits an act which falls under the application of the law against piracy. The same journal further says—The Sardinian Cabinet has ordered the Sardinian vessels off Sicily to oppose with armed force any attempt which may be made by persons who have embarked in vessels hoisting the Sardinian flag.

ITALY.

ROME, May 5 (via Marseilles).—One thousand Irishmen have left Trieste for Ancona in order to be enrolled in the Pontifical army. Letters deny that M. de Corcelles has been appointed Minister, and that he will soon return to France.

May 8.—Notwithstanding the statements of the Sardinian journals that the French troops will have entirely evacuated the Papal States before the end of June, it is certain that the Duke de Grammont, in accordance with instructions received from Paris has declared to the Holy See that the French garrison will not leave the Papal territory until the Sovereign Pontiff himself shall have acknowledged that the departure of the French troops can take place without any danger to the tranquility and safety of his states.

MARSEILLES, Tuesday, May 8.—No news has been received direct from Sicily, but letters from Naples to the 5th inst. state that the insurrection continued in the interior of the island. Government has raised the state of siege at Palmero, but the court-martial was to sit permanently. General Balzano had demanded a reinforcement of 5,000 men in consequence of Garibaldi's expedition.

ROME, May 3.—A proclamation of the Pope has been published to-day, in which His Holiness makes an appeal to the Catholics on behalf of the subscription to the new Roman loan of 50,000,000f., bearing interest at 5 per cent. The subscription has been opened in the capitals of Europe. Belgium has already subscribed 15000,000f

A FATHER TRYING TO SELL HIS CHILDREN INTO SLAVERY.

A difficulty occurred last evening in that part of the city known as Becktown, which arose from the following circumstances: A negro named Frank Buckner called at the house of Mary Emerson, a negress, and demanded the custody of his two children, alleging that since the death of their mother they had been of no particular value to him, and that he was determined to sell them into slavery and release a handsome thing out of them. This very unnatural and hard-hearted desire on the part of the father so rankled the feelings of the woman Emerson that she seized a skillet and commenced such a vigorous on-slaught upon Buckner that he fled incontinently from the premises. About half an hour subsequently he ventured to return, this time, however, provided with a huge bowie knife, the brandishing of which he supposed would intimidate the Amazonian Mary from any further use of the culinary utensil; but, instead of quieting her, it only added the more to her aggravation, and calling upon a second female who occupied an adjoining apartment, the twain set upon Buckner and came nigh using him up, when he managed to gain the mastery by felling them both to the floor with his knife; and, but for the timely arrival of the police, he would have killed them outright. As it was, each of the women, as well as Buckner himself, were badly hurt, he from the effects of the skillet and they from the knife.—Cincinnati Gazette.

A man in Athens (Ga.) six feet in height and weighing two hundred and ten pounds, offers to fight the "Benicia Boy," or any one else in the world, for ten thousand dollars, at any point south of Mason and Dixon's line, during the present year.

Brunson's (Catholic Review predicts the decline of the Catholic Church on account of inferiority of intellect, and remarks that it is not growing by conversions as rapidly as it is diminishing by perverts, and further, that no work of any merit, from the best Papal pen, can command more than 2,000 or 2,500 sales of copies.

DENTISTRY.

JOHN O'DONNELL, Jr.,

DENTIST,

Late of Brockville, C. W.

BEGS to inform the inhabitants of Peterboro' and vicinity, that he has opened an office, and will remain until the last of the month, and also every month from the 15th to the last, when he will be prepared to perform all operations in his profession with skill, and to the satisfaction of persons who may honor him with their patronage.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH

inserted on the latest and most scientific principles, from a single tooth to a whole set, on Gold, Silver, Cheoplastic and Vulcanized Rubber. Particular attention paid to fang filling, or filling teeth after the nerve has become exposed.

Mr. O'D. has paid strict attention to the formation and growth of the temporary and permanent teeth, so that it will be to the interest of parents and guardians if they had anything wrong with their children's teeth to consult him without delay in order to prevent the many inconveniences to which they are constantly subject.

Front Teeth which are too much observed for a Gold filling he fills with the Adontaphoneta, or Crystal Cement, it saves the tooth a long time and does not cause it to discolour.

All operations warranted to give satisfaction, and at prices corresponding with equally good work at moderate.

CHRIST AND HIS APOSTLES.

THE CHEAPEST and most elegant engraving ever published. Dayton & Co.' Magnificent engraving of Thorwalden's Sacrestatues in the Cathedral at Copenhagen, representing

Christ and His Apostles!

Has been issued but a few weeks, and orders for it are pouring in by every mail. Although the original models sent to this country in 1853, and exhibited in the Crystal Palace, were destroyed in that building, the SACRED GROUP, depicted in bold relief in a

Splendid Engraving,

Thirty-two inches in length and twenty-four inches in width, copied by permission of the Danish Government from the Copenhagen Statues, still survives, and five scenes of Gospel History are portrayed in the architectural border surrounding the main picture, viz:

John Preaching in the Wilderness.—Jesus Baptized by John—Christ blessing Little Children—The last Supper.—The Three Mary's at the Sepulchre.

Altogether this is the greatest triumph of art ever witnessed in this country. The Rev. Dr. Prime, editor of the New York Observer, the editors of the New York Evangelist, Christian Advocate, Examiner, Herald of Truth, Chronicle, etc., speak in enraptured terms of the work, and recommend its introduction into every family in the land.

The proof sheets were sold for $25 each, but with the view of affording every family an opportunity to possess this enchanting and instructive picture, the proprietors offer it and an elegant Bible, bound in Velvet, with gilt-edged leaves and rich clasps and mountings, for $2.25 the 25 cents being for return postage.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARIES Free of Cost!

Sabbath School Libraries and Pastor's flock's children can produce this GREAT GOSPEL PICTURE upon such terms as will give their school a Library free of Cost. The picture is in large demand among the members of all Christian Churches. Hundreds of Christian pastors are anxious to encourage their children in well-doing, and to obtain (for the nominal sum of One Dollar) one of the most sublime engravings of modern sculpture, warmly approve of our scheme, and we confident ly expect in supplying the religious public with this unequalled enlightened engraving, to be the means of founding a large number of Sunday School Libraries, and of thus encouraging in two ways the cause of gospel truth and moral culture.

SABBATH SCHOOL CLUBS can be formed by ordering from 25 copies upward, at our wholesale rates of 81 cents each, and we will forward with the engravings a Library (from the American S. S. Union, or any other source) of Two Books for every engraving. Thus, an order for 50 copies, which could be easily raised in most schools would secure 100 Books, and 100 Engravings would secure 200 Books, and so on.

New York, May 8, 1860.

The beautifully executed copy of Thorwaldsen's "Christ and His Apostles" is well fitted to adorn the walls of the Christian dwelling or Sabbath School Room; and will consult valuable religious literature for both young and old.

R. G. Fowler, Church Agent of the New York Sunday School Union.

J. H. Bourne, Agent of the Society of American Sabbath Schools.

☞ Agents wanted every where to sell this work. Send a letter of agency, and we will furnish with one copy of the engraving, and terms.

Agricultural.

FILTRATION vs. EVAPORATION.

That evaporation is a slow and tedious process, is a fact of which the farmer who has cultivated extensive soils, which he would plant or sow in good season, is often reminded, and the drought can scarcely fail to arise, that some quicker way of getting rid of the surplus water would be both convenient and agreeable. If it can be shown that a certain remedy for this source of delay has been found, and can in most cases readily be put in operation at a slight expense compared with its beneficial results, surely none need longer suffer from this cause. That draining is such a remedy—that its application is profitable to the farmer—that in nearly every instance the expense is repaid by longer grasses and better crops, let us attempt briefly to prove.

Look at the retentive soil in spring-time, a stiff clay or hard-pan subsoil, for instance. The water then abundant on the surface and saturating the upper soil, must pass off either by drainage or evaporation. It cannot shut or filtrate away—the impervious subsoil prevents—it cannot drain off; the surface in the level land too retentive of water—hence it must remain stagnant until the warmth of the sun and passing currents of air effect its evaporation. And evaporation is not only a slow process, but a cooling one—the heat passing off with the vapour—and in proportion to the quantity of water thus passing, will be loss of heat from the soil. Up the same soil, when drained filtration will dispose of a like quantity of water without any change of the temperature, save to increase that of the undersoil—equalizing it with that of the surface soil—in spring always warmer than the subsoil. It will dispose of it in a few hours—in a very short time after the frost leaves the ground in spring, or after a heavy shower. Filtration not provided for, the much longer time—weeks instead of hours—required for evaporation, shortens the season of preparation, or totally destroys the chance of a crop.

Could the water how melting mortar of many an undrained clay, find an outlet or passage through the soil, the character of that soil would rapidly be changed. What has not observed how soon heavy clays become friable when placed where the water freely flows from beneath them; or who can fail to see that a like result would follow the deep and thorough draining of even the heaviest soil. And the evils of stagnant water, or water waiting evaporation, can scarcely be overrated. As said above it shortens the season of preparation for crops and it also prevents the proper pulverization of soil; it causes grasses, to heave out and winter kill, and fills lowland meadows with wild grasses and weeds, instead of wholesome herbage.

In case and extended time of working, in the effect of measures applied, in the increase and certainty of productiveness, and in many other things which we might name, the difference between a perous or well drained clayey soil, as compared with an undrained and hence compact and retentive one, is almost marvelous. And this difference is simply "filtration vs. evaporation." In the one case, the excess of water has its course through the soil, passing away by the drains without delay; in the other, it must wait the slow process of evaporation, a process leaving the soil more compact than before, and every way less fitted for producing any crop of value.

This difference in the soil "drained or drowned," as it has been quaintly characterized, is not only observed in early spring but in the heat and drouth of summer. A heavy soil becomes hot dryer and harder from the effect of dry, hot weather than a light one. The porous soil takes up moisture from below, as well as absorbing it readily from the air. Thus a well drained and deeply plowed soil is little injured by drouth—its increased depth of mellow, friable earth given greater extent to its power of supplying moisture to vegetable growth.—Country Gentleman.

HANDLING HORSES WHILE BEING SHOD.

Many horses, both young and old, are much spoiled by shoers. Horses sometimes stand quiet and easy, at other times they refuse to stand still while one foot is up—they struggle until it is released, and frequently the sheer beats, speaks sharply, swears and frightens the horse, so that he must be held by force or abandoned. Another takes the tools and sets his shoe without any trouble. Now for a few of he reasons.

Under certain circumstances, the muscles cramp, causing severe pain. Almost at any time a horse's hind leg may be raised so high, or in such a position, as to cause severe cramping not to be endured. When a horse has had all the muscles relaxed by exercise, and stands and cools, and cools quick; an unusual position will certainly produce cramping, and of the same time makes him irritable. A horse that has stood for some time in the cold, snowy, and suffering with anxiety to get home, in an bad condition to stand the bangs and often painful position of shoeing, and too often fretted to the degree that he never gets over it—too often forced to stand and endure the pain of severe cramping, pricking, etc., until he will never forget it, and often refuses to enter the shop again.

Some horse shoers have a habit of raising the foot and leg so high that no common horse can stand it, and thus he will shoe horses half his lifetime before he knows the fault is in himself. The awkard workman and ill temper of some shoers is sufficient reason to withdraw your patronage, although they may do their work well.—The damage done by forcing the horse to stand in pain, and the injury to his disposition, is infinitely more injury than to go 10 miles, and spend a dry and pay double price to one who has some sympathy and shoes him without pain—one who exercises some reason and judgment and patience, and seems to sympathize with the suffering animal—has little or no trouble, and does no damage.

I once knew a horse that if he was mean a shoe, would go by himself into a particular stall, and there stand till the shoe was set. I once owned a horse that was shod three or four years without any trouble—at last he was cast in a [illegible] shoer, the shoer being a little [illegible] of him, hardened almost into a brute by his manner, that he ever after feared to approach a blacksmith shop, and if forced to such one, would trouble with fear. I think I shall be justified in saying that one-half of the horse shoers are incompetent to the task, saying nothing about their workmanship of setting shoes. I have no doubt but some fancy shoers, are the cause of many spavins, bogs and curbs, as well as kicking, crib-biting, pulling at the halter, etc., etc.

$100 A YEAR,

AND upwards saved to the Farmers, by Aldus Mowry's

CHOP C RINDER.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known or in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 15 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are so fitted into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without altering or adjusting the Machine.

PRICE $60.

All orders directed to "M. Mowry, Ashburnham, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.

PHONOGRAPHY,
or
WRITING BY SOUND!!

PHONOGRAPHY was invented by ISAAC PITMAN, of Bath, England, in the year 1837. It is the most simple, most natural, most rapid, and most easily learned system of writing which has ever been, or ever can be known.

During the past fifteen years, hundreds of thousands of persons, in England and America, in both public and private life, have learned to write Phonography, and thousands of social and business letters annually pass through the post office.

Nor is the great popularity to be wondered at. The present system of writing is exceedingly cumbersome, and totally unworthy these days of progress and invention. Phonography is equally as legible, can be learned in one twentieth the time, and can be written six times as fast! In other words, the labor of six days can be performed in one—one man can do the work of six. So simple is the system, too, that a person may learn to write it slowly, in a couple of hours. An hour's daily practice for a few weeks will enable any person to write Phonography with certainty, and with some degree of freedom. The same amount of practice continued for six months will enable a person to take reports of speeches, lectures, sermons, or conversation, and to read them with accuracy.

The late Hon. Thos. H. Benton, upon being presented with a verbatim report of one of his masterly speeches, taken by a little boy only twelve years of age, said: "Had this art been known 40 years ago it would have saved me 20 years hard labor." The learned senator spoke but a portion of the truth. What long-hand requires six years to accomplish, Phonography will perform in one.

To clergymen, Editors, Physicians, Lawyers, Secretaries, Conveyancers, Law and Medical Students, Lecturers, Printers, School Teachers, Merchants, School Boys and Girls, a knowledge of Phonography is of vast utility. In fact there is no profession or calling in which it is not useful, and no young man's education can be considered complete without it.

During the past 9 months hundreds of persons in Canada, of every pursuit in life, have acquired the Art, from many of whom the subscriber has received neatly-written phonographic letters, expressive of their delight with the attainment, and the extraordinary ease with which they have acquired it.

For the purpose of aiding in the dissemination of so important a reform in his own country, the subscriber is now prepared to supply all who apply, with the MANUEL OF PHONOGRAPHY, and the PHONOGRAPHIC COPY BOOK, sent by mail to any part of the Province, postage pre-paid, for the small sum of ONE DOLLAR.

Anybody and everybody, who can learn anything, can learn PHONOGRAPHY from the MANUAL without other assistance. Those who wish to be able to put their thoughts to paper at the rate of from 100 to 250 words per minute, should send for the above-mentioned works at once. The instruction given by the Manual is as plain as A. B. C., and ten times as easy to understand.

PEALE'S
COURT OF DEATH

The subscriber is now issuing 100,000 Splendid Colored Engravings Of Rembrandt Peale's celebrated Original Painting of the Court of Death.

at the unprecedentedly low price of

The lowest regular price for engravings of the size and quality of this is $5; and in answer to the question "how can they be sold for One Dollar?" the subscriber would state, that instead of issuing 5,000 copies at $5, he issues 100,000 copies at $1. The main expense of such a work is not in the paper and printing, but in getting up the plates. If 5,000 only are sold, $5 is but a fair price. But if 100,000 are sold at $1, the aggregate profits are larger than on the 5,000.

The Original Painting, of which the Engravings are a fac-simile Copy, was painted by Rembrandt Peale, in the City of Baltimore, in 1820, and has been the study and admiration of tens of thousands of our citizens. It has long been valued at 25,000 Dollars.

Death is personified as a King or Monarch, and there is not a skeleton or anything repulsive in the picture.

There are twenty-three full sized figures in the engravings, and arranged into five groups presenting living representations of DEATH, WAR, SICKNESS, DRUNKENNESS, INTEMPERANCE, and the TRIUMPH OF CHRISTIAN FAITH OVER THE TERRORS OF DEATH.

It is a work to DELIGHT THE EYE and IMPROVE THE HEART. It can be studied and understood by a child, while its sublime conception all who escape to the strongest imagination.

It has been made the subject of special discourse, by Rev. Dr. Sprague, Rev. Dr. Welch, Rev. Dr. Bacon, Rev. Dr. Cleveland, Rev. Dr. Wayland, and others.

A more impressive, instructive, or beautiful Parlor Ornament could not be purchased.

By enclosing ☞ ONE DOLLAR and four letter stamps (to pay postage,) the Engraving will be forwarded, postpaid, rolled in a strong case.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS supplied at a liberal discount.

CANVASSERS can add at least fifty dollars per week to their income (in commission) by interesting themselves in the distribution, and at the same time place in the hands of each subscriber, (what President Hale calls) "a sermon on canvas."

Any person sending $5, shall receive a sixth copy gratis postpaid.

AGENTS—Gentlemen or Ladies—can make money rapidly by taking subscriptions for this beautiful work. One dollar and six stamps from Agents, for one copy and a letter of Agency stating special terms.

Until the duplicate plates are finished only 200 engravings can be furnished per day—but they will be forwarded in the order of receipt of subscription.

If more than $10 are sent in one letter, better get a draft, or have the letter registered.

To avoid mistakes, the NAME, TOWN, COUNTY and STATE should be PLAINLY written.

STARTLING BUT TRUE
SURVIVE OR PERISH.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS

The history of this great remedy is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experience of one nation, but consists of a compilation of testimonials from the sick of every country—a record, the like of which has never been adduced in favour of any discovery or invention since time began.

BILIOUS DISORDERS.

In whatever form disease attacks the liver, it is repelled and exterminated by this searching, painless and irresistible curative.

Let the sick whom the faculty have abandoned resort with confidence to this antibilious agent, and a restoration to health and activity will be the unerring result.

DYSPEPSIA.

The great scourge of this continent yields quickly to a course of these antiseptic Pills and the digestive organs are restored to their proper tone: no matter in what hideous shape this hydra of disease exhibits itself, this searching and unerring remedy dispenses it from the patient's system.

GENERAL DEBILITY AND WEAKNESS.

From whatever cause, low state or arrests, and all other signs of a diseased liver, and other disorganization of the system, vanish under the eradicating influence of this all powerful antiseptic and detergent remedy.

PICKLY PIMPLES

Should lose no time in trying a few doses of this regulating and renovating remedy; whatever may be their complaint, it can be taken with safety in all periodical and other disorganizations; its effect is all but miraculous.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy known in the world for the following diseases:

Asthma,	Headaches,
Bowel Complaints,	Indigestion,
Coughs,	Influenza,
Colds,	Inflammation,
Chest Diseases,	Inward Weakness
Contractions,	Liver Complaints,
Dysentery,	Lowness of Spirits,
Diarrhœa,	Piles,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Debility,	Secondary Symptoms,
Fever and Ague,	Venereal Affections,
Female Complaints,	Worms of all kinds.

☞ Caution!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

. Sold at the Manufactory of Professor Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 63 cents and $1 each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each box.

EXPERIMENTAL SCIENCE.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.

CONSOLATION FOR THE SUFFERING.

Nearly fifty years continual use in every part of the habitable globe, amongst the savage and the civilized alike, has proved that simple eruptions, open sores, hard tumors, scrofulous developments of all kinds, abscesses, cancers, old wounds, and, in one word, every species of incrustation and suppuration, whether in the skin, the flesh, the glands, or among the muscles, can be arrested and permanently cured, without danger, by rubbing in and using as a dressing, this inestimable Ointment.

SCROFULA, ERYSIPELAS, AND SALT RHEUM, ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN, PILES, AND FISTULA,

No remedy has ever done so much for the cure of diseases of the Skin, whatever form they may assume, as this Ointment. No case of Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore Heads, Scrofula or Erysipelas, can long withstand its influence.

BAD LEGS, OLD SORES, ULCERS, &c.

Cases of many years standing that have pertinaciously refused to yield to any other remedy or treatment, have invariably succumbed to a few applications of this powerful ointment.

Arising from a bad state of the blood or chronic disease, are eradicated, and a clear and transparent surface regained by the restorative action of this Ointment. It surpasses many of the cosmetics and other toilet appliances in its power to dispel rashes and other disfigurements of the face.

Every form and feature of these prevalent and stubborn disorders is eradicated locally and entirely by the use of this emollient; warm fomentations should precede its application. Its healthy qualities will be found to be thorough and invariable.

Both the Ointment and Pills will be used in the following cases:

Bunions,	Skin Diseases,
Burns,	Swelled Glands,
Chapped Hands,	Sore Legs,
Chilblains,	Sore Breasts,
Fistula,	Sore Heads
Gout,	Sore Throats,
Lumbago,	Sores of all kinds,
Mercurial Eruptions,	Sprains,
Piles,	Stiff Joints,
Rheumatism,	Tetter,
Ringworm,	Ulcers,
Salt Rheum,	Venereal Sores,
Scalds,	Wounds of all Kinds.

☞ Caution!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

DAVID AND GOLIATH.

(From the Times.)

When the gigantic Philistine for forty days defied the armies of Israel, and when all the great men of war fled from him, it was the least considered stripling in the Hebrew host to whom the thought of combat first occurred. To this familiar bit of our earliest reading the upstarts of Napoleon III. and of the little Swiss Republic seem to suggest a parallel. There stands that great French Emperor, head and shoulders above all who might be supposed ready to measure themselves with him, the staff of his spear more powerful than all our warrior's beams; and he is covered all over with brass, and he comes to shout through the hundred voices of the Paris press: "Give me a man that we may fight together."—And all the great men of war—Sir wit, Austria, and Prussia, and Russia—shift away, and are sore afraid, putting in only little puny protests, and hardly even daring to gather together on the opposite hills, with the broad valley between them, and waiting with little hope for some volunteer to accept the challenge of this brazen man of war. Suddenly, however, down comes the ruddy, fair-haired stripling, who has left his few sheep in the wilderness, and has brought his ten chances with him, and is animated only by his confidence in the goodness of his cause, and by his recollection of former combats with a lion and a bear, and the two brats look on upon the two combatants with hopelessness on one side, and with contempt on the other, and no one has a doubt how the fight must end. When we are told that this little Helvetian Republic, this small speck in the map of Europe has actually contemplated opposing force to force if the French Emperor should occupy with his armies the neutralised provinces of Savoy, no other parallel is sacred or profane history seems to touch the present crisis except that history of Goliath and David. We see no doubt whether to abandon ourselves to a natural admiration of the indomitable courage and steady daring which invite such a hazardous combat, or to chide as pride and "haughtiness of heart" the presumption which would snatch itself so unequally. The age of miracles is, however, past; and there is now long prescriptive custom of success in favor of "the great battalions."

Seriously possible, however, as it would seem, the testimony is now strong that the Swiss have drawn their forces down to Geneva with the serious intention of fighting the whole French Empire, if any French soldier should be sent into the neutralised provinces. The Swiss confederation has always declared its resolution to do so.—When the war between France and Austria began it gave diplomatic notice that it was ready to resist any infraction of the neutrality of which it was constituted the immediate guardian. Switzerland in this point considers herself placed as the watch-dog of Europe, and always professes herself ready to discharge the duty honestly.

She will resist to the uttermost of her power, and trust to the self-respect of those who placed her at her post to rouse to her assistance when her own strength is no longer sufficient for the occasion. "If," says our correspondent, writing from Geneva only a few days ago, "the French committed flagrant illegality—such, for instance as occupying militarily the neutralised districts—force will be opposed to force."—The trained peasants are now being drawn together from their rafters, and what are, of course, irritated against those who have been the cause of the unusual demand upon their time, seem rather to wish that the occasion should occur, and rather disposed to provoke it; but every man of common feeling must anxiously desire that no such incongruous contest should ever take place. We hope Sir Robert Peel, who is reported to be making somewhat rash pledges at Geneva, will never give any advice which can precipitate so lamentable an event. Switzerland has accepted him as her friend and counsellor, and in the English Parliament he speaks with some authority on her behalf. We hope that if Switzerland should embark in such a contest as this, it will not be under the instigation of an Englishman. But if no one were to accept the absurd proposition, the policy she now avows, the Emperor of the French is by no means in a position to despise that determined combatant. A pugnacious little fellow is always a most uncomfortable opponent for a strong, big man. Even if the dwarf should be in the wrong, he will generally have the sympathies of the by-standers in his favour; but if he should be, as in this instance, in the right, there is no measure in the arms of his large antagonist. Switzerland, however, is a dwarf in appearance, rather than reality. She can bring 120,000 men into the field in six weeks, and 200,000 if it be then comes to a question of defending her own valleys. Of these, 70,000 are the most experienced rifle-men in the world, and though the Tyrolese bull's-eye-men did not succeed against the French masses we may recollect that the Italian campaign was fought in the flats. Our correspondent, who knows what campaigning is, and who has an experienced eye for estimating the effectiveness of a soldier, ranks them for strength, endurance and skill in the management of their weapons, with any corps d'elite of any European army.—They can keep the field in that defensive warfare, on which alone they ever desire to engage, with a champion unknown to the great military machines of aggressive powers. They would be overcome eventually as Circassia was overcome by Russia, that as their Empire were overborne by Napoleon, for a population of 2,000,000 cannot maintain a contest with a population of 90,000,000. But the attack would cost to a crime dear to a tyrant. If the contest should be prolonged, the European vassals would be so great, that no one can calculate what new combinations might arise. Not unmindful of the giant of France, he still may doubt whether Switzerland could be conquered in one campaign; we may even venture to assert that it could not be done without drawing Germany into the field, and perhaps bringing on European conflagration.

In the object itself the ground. What does the Emperor of the French want of these two upper provinces of Savoy? It cannot be to go and come as they do when they come into him. He has this already in the entire possession of the great road over Mont Cenis, and of all the mountain passes which afford transit from France to Piedmont. What can he desire in the mountains which look over the Lake of Geneva? Why is it absolutely necessary to him that he should have a piece of mountain territory contiguous to it on two sides? What can it matter to him in the question of the Valley of Chamouni, and the glaciers of Mount Blanc? The whole settlement from the Grand Chartreuse are not likely to invade France. Pass need not be fortified by fosse of piratical Savoy fitted out in the harbors. Lausanne and the environs of Chillon. Napoleon III. cannot want Chillon and Vevay for any other purpose than to give him the same spy amongst the Switzerland which he has now obtained with Italy. When Victor Emanuel was willing to cede that ancient to Italy, we thought it unwise that England should attempt to prevent two powerful sovereigns making a very objectionable arrangement between themselves as to a piece of inland territory which directly concerned them only. We held that it would be less unwise if England were to attempt to prevent Louis Napoleon existing upon the southern shore of the Lake of Geneva.—But if these hold and obstinate Switzers are ready to fight for it, and if they have an army of 200,000 men to begin the contest, we put it to the Emperor whether it would not be prudent in him, as it certainly would be convenient to the rest of Europe if he were to postpone this part of general policy for a more favorable opportunity.

THE IRISH EXODUS.

(From the London Times.)

The Irish emigrating still continues, at a rate which the most sanguine Malthusian far beyond the calculations of the economist, perhaps even the wishes of the statesman. It is no longer the overflow of a vessel full to repletion, but the operation of a syphon which drains to the very bottom. If that syphon may be regarded in any visible form it is the railway system, which in the eyes of every Hibernian appears to have one common excursion across the Atlantic. No sooner trains of hopeful, if not happy, faces going off to the Land of Promise, from which relations and friends have sent not only invitations but the means of accepting them. A train starts to catch an emigrant vessel as regularly as in England to catch a steamer across the channel. The emigrant ships have no longer to peep into every little port to pick up their passengers. They assemble at Cork, and pass in a continuous stream, if it may be so called, across that ocean, which, wide as it be, is easier to an Irishman than the gulf which divides him from England. At present it cannot be said that there braver Ireland as much as the natural increase, but the causes in operation are not unlikely to make it exceed that rate. As the small holdings are thrown into larger and the farms grow to the English scale, there must be numbers everywhere bred to the occupation of land, and with all the ideas adapted to it, but unable to get holdings that will require little or no capital.—They go across the Atlantic as a matter of course. Brothers, uncles, and neighbors have gone long before, and send, not only good news, but the substantial pledge of its truth in the shape of orders on Irish banks to frame the remark in that there are welcome to go. They are the Irish surplus. They constitute the store-house of independent enterprise which Providence would seem to have prepared through long ages for the peopling of the New World. But there is a class who are not bid "God speed" quite so cheerfully. Labourers—that is, men with strong clenched and thews, who can do a good day's work, and are content to receive wages, are, as they always have been the chief want of Ireland. The new realm of farmers do not like to see them go. But who can pick and choose in human affairs? There are good, easy souls, who enter life with this speculation, who expect in everything the fruit without the husk, the [illegible] without the stone, the sweet without the sour, the harvest without the tillage.—In Ireland they expect a good farm, a good [illegible] and some good labourers, who shall [illegible] and do a good day's work. But the customs recoils at all doors and brings to these, as well as their prouder neighbours, [illegible] and good accounts from the Western States; and off they go, leaving the new tenant farmers to manage as well as they can.

If this goes on long, as it is likely to go on, Ireland will become very English and the United States very Irish. [illegible] agriculturist takes a farm [illegible] in Kerry he will take English labourers with him. This we shall come to at last, strange as it may [illegible] Then, indeed, and not [illegible] when Ireland will be no more Celtic than the Scotch lowlands or Saxon, the Eastern Counties Dutch, Cornwall even Phœnician, and Ireland itself Milesian or Spanish. But several millions more assimilated Celts cannot be poured into the United States without leaving them even more strongly with that very marked element. There will be more poetry, more eloquence, more fanaticism, more fanfare, more conspiracy, more resentment, more bloodshed, more insubordination, more of the narrow politics that take their origin from race and step short of society, that ever cement the whole less than the part, and think the best use of government is to do convenient ill. So no Ireland there will still be, but on a classical scale, and in a new world. We shall only have pushed in Celt, Westward. Then, no longer cooped up between the Liffey and the Shannon, he will spread from New York to San Francisco, and keep up the ancient feud at an unforseen vantage. We must gird our loins to encounter the Nemesis of seven centuries' misgovernment. To the end of time a hundred millions people spread over the largest habitable area in the world, and confronting us every where by sea and by land, will remember that their forefathers paid tithe to the Protestant clergy, rent to absentee landlords, and a forced obedience to the laws which these had made. Possibly a darker and more significant era at home may intervene to change these Old World recollections. But, even though the vengeful Celt should forgive and forget, that will not prevent the surer development of an intractable race and untoward circumstances in the character of the great American nation. It will be more than half Celtic. Saxon, Dane, Gaul, Frank, German, African, and other races will be there, but the preponderating element will be that which has risen to its perfection and glory on the banks of the Seine, and taken in its depth and danger on the western promontories of Ireland. As the child is father of the man, so hope we many ages hence that [illegible] Irish [illegible] will [illegible] that still [illegible] Celtic [illegible] show its influence over other nations, and be the hard of a [illegible] [illegible] This is the true and high hope of the Celtic race. It is for the Irish themselves, and not [illegible] fiend here this [illegible] years [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

PRINCE NAPOLEON TO VISIT CANADA

BREADSTUFFS FALLING!!

Farther Point, May 28.

The screw-steamship Palestine has arrived at this port.

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Lords, the Marquis of Normanby moved for the production of all correspondence with the British Representatives in Italy relative to the Garibaldi expedition. The Government promised to produce the despatches.

Mr. Gladstone has withdrawn his measure relative to newspaper postage, on the plan of Sir Rowland Hills ill-health.

Mr. Cardwell stated that the attention of Government had been called to the collection of money in Ireland for the use of the Pope, and to enlistment for the Papal army. Such proceedings were entirely irregular, and any would be taken to check them.

Lord John Russell stated that Lord Cowley had received an intimation from the French Government that France would claim further territorial compensation, if the Sardinian territory was extended by the pending movements. He also announced that the Government had received information from St. Petersburg as to the state of affairs in Turkey, but they had no information as to the concentration of the Russian army on the Pruth.

Puddager, the defaulting cashier of the Union Bank, was sentenced to twenty years' penal servitude.

Sir Charles Barry, architect, died of paralysis.

Eugene Plummier, 11 years of age had been found guilty of perjury against Redmer Mesdag, and sentenced to two years in the reformatory!

ITALY.

Garibaldi with 1,000 followers, had landed at Mignala, under fire of two Neapolitan frigates. One of Garibaldi's steamers was captured and the other sunk.

Col. Medici was forwarding the preparation for a second expedition of 6,000. It was asserted that the energetic diplomatic representations made to Piedmont would decide the Government to prevent its departure.

A Turin paper publishes a letter from Garibaldi, excusing himself for having forcibly taken possession of the steamers Piedmont and Lombardi on the ground of its being done in the interest of the national cause. He has issued a proclamation, calling upon the inhabitants of the Marches, Umbria, Sabina, and the Neapolitan States to revolt, in order to divide the forces of the enemy.

FRANCE.

The Grand Duke Nicholas, brother to the Emperor of Russia, had arrived at Paris on a visit to Napoleon.

The Paris correspondent of the London Herald says:—Seldom have matters worn a more critical aspect, and it is stated that France, Russia, Austria and Spain are leagued together.

The Times says communications are passing between England and France, in which it is proposed that the two Governments should set their faces against all interference in Italian affairs; and that the Sicilians and Neapolitans should be left to fight it out themselves.

The relations between France and England require such gentle handling that the Government press have been notified to use no strong language with respect to England.

Prince Napoleon intends visiting the ports of Canada and the United States, in his new yacht the Canard.

The Paris Presse received a second warning for an article respecting France as an accomplice of foreign coalitions which overthrew the first Empire.

ROME.

General Lamoriciere continued to concentrate Papal troops at Gabbio. Stated dates had been fixed for the evacuation of Rome by the French troops. The first detachment would leave very shortly.

PRUSSIA.

The Government project for an extraordinary credit of 9,500,000 thalers, for temporarily placing the army upon a war footing, was agreed to by a vote of 315 to 2.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

Russia again menaces Turkey, in the interest of the Christians.

The attitude of Russia is regarded as decidedly menacing. An understanding has been brough about between France and Russia in reference to Asia Minor. Russia is stated to have collected near Nicolaiff a great number of transport ships including navy merchant steamers.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

David Jones & Co., and Thompson, Simmons & Co., old established houses at Sydney have suspended; liabilities supposed £250,000 stg.

ITALY.

The Naples fleet was privately despatched to Sicily. The French Minister at Naples has called for three ships of war, and the vessels had been sent.

A French fleet was about to sail for the Levant.

There was rapid retreat of a new Bourbon force for military purposes.

ITALY.

The accounts from Naples represent that there is the utmost consternation prevailing. The troops are deserting. Treasonable conciliations are taking place; the Royal Family are packing up their jewels and movables, and there are other strong indications that a general insurrection was looked for at any moment.

At latest dates, Garibaldi's forces were moving on Palermo.

The accounts from Garibaldi's expedition are still meagre and conflicting, but reports generally concur in stating that he was making good progress. None say he had captured the most important positions in Sicily, except Messina and Palermo. After his landing at Marsala, the Neapolitan war vessels bombarded that town without warning, and the British vessels interposed for the protection of English residents.

The important announcement was made via Madrid, that the King of Naples had applied for foreign intervention.

Among other questions, it was rumoured that a treaty offensive and defensive had been concluded between Naples, Rome, Austria, and all the deposed Italian Sovereigns.

It was reported that General Lamoriciere had made a forward movement with the Papal troops and 5,000 of the Piedmontese were despatched to check him.

It is positively asserted that the French troops in Rome had received orders to evacuate the city.

It was said that the Sardinian government had ordered the troops in the garrison of Central Italy to march immediately towards the Papal frontiers.

SPAIN.

General Concha was elected President of the Spanish Senate, and decorated with the order of the Golden Fleece.

The army of Africa entered Madrid amid much enthusiasm.

RUSSIA.

The Austrian Government had stated that the British Ambassador to Russia on receipt of Gortschakoff's communication relative to Turkey, had lodged a formal protest against it. This was not correct. He only received the communication under reserve, and stating that he would refer it to his Government for instructions.

A later despatch says that England would not interpose.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP.

Bell's Life of this morning announces that a meeting took place between Sayers and Heenan at that office yesterday, to discuss measures for terminating the dispute between them as to the possession of the champion belt.

It was ultimately agreed that two new belts, exact counterparts of the one so much coveted should be made. The money for the purchase to be raised by public subscription, each of the candidates was to head the list, for that to be held by his opponent; the old belt will remain in the possession of the proprietor of Bell's Life, to be fought for by whoever may aspire to the honour of wearing it. Sayers has engaged to retire from the prize ring.

Rev. Theodore Parker died at Florence on the 10th.

A letter from Garibaldi explains that the steamers used by him were taken possession of forcibly and not chartered.

Garibaldi had issued proclamations to the Romans and Neapolitans calling upon them to revolt.

Palermo despatches of the 13th says, in five churches, at the termination of mass, shouts of "Italy forever!" "Liberty forever!" &c., was raised. In the evening the populace to the number of 10,000 assembled. The police were unable to disperse them, and the troops were called out and fired on the people, killing four and wounding ten. Several persons were arrested.

There was some excitement at Florence owing to the appearance of placards in favour of the ex-Grand Duke.

There were rumours of the intention of an attempt at the recovery of his power.—The garrison was strengthened and the National Guard called out.

A defalcation on a small scale has been discovered against the Cashier of Pauly & Co.'s Bank, London, but no prosecution made.

An influential deputation headed by Milner Gibson had laid before Lord Palmerston the plans for Colonel Shaffner's telegraph to America via the Faroe Islands and Ireland.

The Russian Grand Duke Nicholas was on a visit to the Emperor Napoleon.

A report that France had offered pecuniary indemnity to Switzerland was unfounded.

Austria refuses to admit Piedmont to the Conference, on the ground that Count Cavour has declared she intended to take no part in the dispute between France and Switzerland.

The King of Naples had subscribed a million scudi to the Papal loan.

The Prussian Chambers had passed the government project for the war credit—315 against 21.

Russia is said to have collected at Nicholaieff a large number of transports.

Advices from Sydney, Australia, report the failure of David Jones & Co., and Thompson, Simmons & Co. Liabilities £250,000. It is thought that other houses will follow.

On a Saturday evening, not long ago considerable excitement was caused at Lyons by a person stationing himself on the Quai Saint Clair, and presenting to every man that passed wearing a blouse a half franc piece which he pulled from a bag. Some people, thinking he was mad, refused or ran from him, but he cried out, "Do not be afraid me, I am not mad." I have unexpectedly come into a legacy of 30,000 francs a year per month, and I have resolved, in order to show my gratitude and joy, to distribute 500 francs to working men." So saying, he continued his distributions until the bag was empty, after which he quietly went away.

Herman writes to "Wilkes' Spirit of the Times" that a day has been appointed for another fight between himself and Sayers. He adds that he considers the last difficult part of the matter is the fighting as although he does not blame Sayers for anything, he thinks that the man who has a hundred to forty against him (Heenan) will effectually prevent him winning. In order to avoid which play there are to be no tickets for the entrance, and with only about twenty-five persons on each side present, he thinks the best man may win, which he is confident will be himself, in twenty minutes.

ANCHOR LINE OF STEAM PACKETS AND COMMUNICATION WITH SCOTLAND.

From the Montreal Gazette.

A spirited effort is now being made by a wealthy and enterprising firm in Glasgow to establish a regular line of steamships between that port and the St. Lawrence.—During last season the fine ships John Bell and United Kingdom successfully carried out the experiment with regularity, speed and safety of transit to both goods and passengers, and we hope, indeed we have no doubt, that such is the prospect of business for the line, that as a commercial speculation, it will realize the expectations of its enterprising owners, who have, unaided, begun an enterprise which we hope will be productive of import at results towards the development of our resources.

Our intercourse with Scotland has hitherto been carried on almost entirely by sailing vessels, and although many fine ships are annually employed in this trade, long and protracted voyages are constantly occurring, causing disappointment to passengers, and serious loss to our merchants, whose goods often come to hand too late for the intended market, and consequently can only be disposed of at a great sacrifice, if at all.

With regard to passengers and traffic for which we may remark, these fine vessels are conveniently fitted, so one, we are sure, will gainsay that to those of our intending citizens, natives of Scotland, or who may be residing there, an opportunity of leaving their country for the land of their adoption in a steamer sailing direct to Canada will be considered a great boon, which can only be fully understood and appreciated by those who have experienced the anxiety of removing a family and a home. Even to single emigrants from Scotland, there is no hardship considered so great as the necessity of having first to proceed to an English seaport with all their baggage, ere they can fairly be embarked for the Atlantic voyage.

We are gratified to learn that another steamer similar to the United Kingdom is now in process of construction for the line, and the celebrity of her builders, Messrs Tod & Macgregor, of Glasgow, is an undoubted guarantee of her success as regards strength and speed.

We understand that during the winter months the John Bell and the United Kingdom have been engaged in the trade between Glasgow and New York, which is said to have proved more remunerative to the others than that between Glasgow and Canada during last season; but trusting to the course of events, and with a perseverance worthy of success, they have again placed their valuable ships in our trade, evidently trusting to their proved efficiency for that public patronage which will ensure success to their undertaking.

Further, we have only to remark that however advantageous it may be to merchants in thus having a direct and regular mode of of transit for their imported goods and exported produce, the fixed day of sailing, which is regularly adhered to by these steamers, is frequently a very serious disadvantage to their owners, when, owing to the state of the market or other temporary cause, a momentary cessation takes place in shipments on either side, for full or not full the steamer must sail on the day appointed. Such an enterprise, conducted in such a spirit, deserves a hearty support.

THE LUMBER TRADE OF THE WEST.

Probably no branch of commercial industry suffered more severely from the momentary crisis of 1857, and the stagnation which followed it, than the lumber trade; and certainly there are few which have been slower recovering their former vigor. Any resident of our city in 1856 to 1857, who will now take a walk along the various branches of our river, and see the acres of empty yards and docks, and the diminutive looking lumber piles which now and then relieve the eye, will appreciate the condition of this trade. And this state of affairs exists, not on account of any diversion in the channels of business, but simply by reason of a genuine reaction. The fact is undeniably that no branch of business was more thoroughly overdone in the flood tides of 156-57, than the lumber trade. True there was an immense demand for lumber, in consequence of the rapid growth of new towns and cities all over the northwest, as well as the improvements which took place in wild lands; but both among manufacturers and dealers there was a most reckless disposition displayed to increase business, and when the hard times came, they felt the shock all the more in consequence. In the spring of 1858 it was thought by many that the business had settled down to a moderate basis, and that a fair trade would ensue; but the supply proved one hundred millions more than their estimates and expectations, and the few who did not 'make a loss' were those who lay quiet and did least. The result was, however, that quite a number of dealers quit the business, and now the trade of 1860 has fairly opened with a reduction of at least forty per cent of those engaged in it in 1857.—Chicago Press and Tribune.

...CULTURAL LIBRARIES.

Every one feels the value of conversation with sensible men as to matters with which they are familiar, and which are also of interest to us. Frequent opportunities of [illegible] conversations had with [illegible] from this opportunities the life of the farmer, to some degree, debars him. To make a visit to a neighbor involves [illegible] from the plow. Thus important questions remain unapproved, and erroneous notions are [illegible] A few minutes conversation with an intelligent friend would have answered or rectified. During the long winter evenings, or during the weary rainy days, or during those periods of [illegible] [illegible] would be to have with us a sensible man, with whom we could interchange thoughts on subjects of common interest to the farmer.

Books, to some extent, supply this intercourse, but [illegible] Works on modern agriculture are of comparatively [illegible] [illegible] by the ancients. But after the decline of the Roman Empire agriculture seems [illegible] as an ignoble pursuit—proper only for boors and peasants. Recently it has changed its character to the [illegible] of men. It is coming to be regarded as an occupation in which science is quite as necessary to a great success as practice. By science we do not mean a collection of very hard names strung together in a very [illegible] way. But by science we mean knowledge—[illegible] as opposed to ignorance. [illegible] best way of doing that which he desires to do, and the reasons for it. Of course his knowledge must be accompanied with industrious practice, or it will be of little worth to him.

Since the application of science to agriculture, treatises upon agriculture have been greatly multiplied. We [illegible] that books supply, to some degree, the place of conversation. In some respects they are superior to it, if we consider the drawbacks usually connected with conversation in country life. For instance, [illegible] are not [illegible] in which a man will [illegible] to the best form. There are two ways of getting this information. One is to go to our most sensible neighbor for explanation and see how his gates are made. But this requires [illegible] and a good part of a day, and we have at least the gate of [illegible] one man—whose way to others better than his. Another way is to step to our library, take down "Loudon's Encyclopedia of [illegible]," look in the index for the word "gate," and [illegible] which has been used with success. The gate illustration opens the way to the whole field of agricultural inquiry.

REPLY:

To J. T. Hudson Esq., and others,

Gentlemen:—Allow me to thank you for the requisition presented to me this day. I cheerfully comply with your request, and should I be elected to the Mayoralty my greatest desire will be to fill the office to the satisfaction of the rate-payers of the Town. You may rely on my strict attention being given to all the duties of the office.

I am, gentlemen,
your ob'th serv't
CHARLES PERRY.
Peterboro', 4th Dec. 1860.

To the Municipal Electors OF THE TOWN OF PETERBOROUGH.

Gentlemen,

I am now before you as Candidate for Mayor, for the next year. I am unfortunately entered late in the field; nevertheless I should hope that the favor which I expect to meet with from you will carry me through any difficulty on that score.

It is necessary for me [illegible] words to you. I may say that I have served a [illegible] apprenticeship to the [illegible] and I know well that all [illegible] paying to have the affairs of the Corporation carried on efficient and satisfactorily is to appoint a person to the office of Mayor who will really take an interest in the Town business, who will attend to it faithfully and be responsible for the due performance of his duty. If you elect me I will give my whole time and attention to the interests of the town, and you may depend upon me discharging my duty faithfully and without fear or favor.

It appears to me that the great want we have experienced since the incorporation of our town is the want of a sufficient [illegible] of the Executive who would [illegible] at his post, and [illegible] a vigilant eye over all the subordinates of the town and keep things in their proper order—who would be as Police Magistrate, see that the peace rowdyism and [illegible] and enforce good order and sobriety—who would see after and be responsible for the due enforcing of the payment of all the rents, tolls, and other revenues of the town—who would see after and attend to the thousand and one matters which it has hitherto, apparently, been no body's business to attend to, and from the neglect of which the Corporation has hitherto suffered incalculable loss—and who would, in fine, keep all the business of the town in motion and attend diligently to its interests.

If all these duties were performed as they should be (and they could not have been by former Mayors, who always had their own private business affairs as their first consideration) we would have a far different state of things from that which has existed for years past. Instead of each retiring Council leaving at the end of the year the finances of the town entirely unsettled, a large amount of the revenues of the town still uncollected, and a large arrear of debt as a legacy to the succeeding Council, people clamouring for and scrambling to have their accounts paid and no funds wherewith to pay them, ratepayers refusing to pay their taxes on the ground that they had accounts against the Corporation which they could not get paid—all the income of the town would be collected in good time, people would look forward, as a matter of course, to paying the taxes, rents, tolls, &c., due to the Corporation, punctually—accounts due by the Corporation would be paid punctually in cash, and each Council would retire leaving the town affairs finally closed for the year, all assets collected, all debts paid and a clear score.

This, Gentlemen, is what ought to be the state of things, and all this I do sincerely think can be accomplished, and, if elected Mayor, I will, if properly supported by the Council, confidently look forward to such a consummation. I know exactly what is required to be done to make the affairs of the town work to much better purpose than hitherto, and I feel that I do not promise more than I can accomplish.

If you see fit to entrust me with the management of the affairs of the town I trust and hope, and feel every confidence that you will never have reason to regret your choice.

In conclusion, as to the proposed consolidation of the debts of the town, and as to the procuring a sufficient supply of water for the town, as a safeguard against fire, and any other schemes likely to concern the interests of the Corporation, I can only assure you, Gentlemen, that you shall not find me wanting in my duty to you or to your interests.

I am, Gentlemen,
Your ob't Servant,
IVAN O'BEIRNE,

EVERY FARMER HIS OWN MILLER!

THE NEW FARM MILL,

MANUFACTURED by A. Harris, Dunnville, C. W., took the 1st prize at the late Provincial Fair at Hamilton, where its operation was fully tested—one bushel of corn being ground in a satisfactory manner in less than 5 minutes. No [illegible] was ever offered to the public that gives such universal satisfaction. It is simple and durable, requiring but little power, and is cheap.

It is made on an entirely new principle, which wholly overcomes the difficulty existing in all cast-iron rotary Mills, and will grind all kind of grains in the most perfect manner, and can be worked by hand or horse power.

—PRICE $37.—

delivered at any Railroad Station within 20 miles of Peterboro.

The subscriber has been appointed Agent for the United Counties of Peterboro and Victoria, and will be happy to supply orders promptly.—The new Farm Mill can be seen at the subscribers' residence, on Queen St. south of Hunter St., opposite the English Church.

THE NEW NATIONAL DOUBLE THREAD $20 FAMILY

SEWING MACHINE.

THE GREATEST INVENTION OF THE AGE.

A Double Thread, Lock Stitch Sewing Machine for the low price of $20!

All other cheap Machines take the single thread or chain stitch.

IN presenting the New National Sewing Machine to the Public, we do so with the utmost confidence in its practical utility, its complete adaptation for family use, its simplicity of construction, and its real general merits.

We are prepared to furnish all who wish, with our new "Treadle Attachment," or "Foot Power" particularly adapted to the Table machine, thereby avoiding the expense of the Table and Stand. This convenient arrangement can be secured to the end of any table or stand in a moments' time, and the machine set in operation sewing at the rate of 2,000 STITCHES PER MINUTE!!

It can also, in as short a time be removed from the table and packed away. As to its durability, like the machine, the Treadle will last for a generation. The price is only $20. Machines upon a neat table [illegible] walnut and iron, with foot power, are $30.

The sub-agency of the National Machine and others are many and obvious; and, while the double-thread machine must [illegible] $50 to $100, the National Machine, equally as beautiful and practical, is offered for only $20.

Any two Men, Fell, Stitch, Gather and Bind in the most perfect manner, and are the only machines in the market that can do so well and simply make that they may be sent into families with no other instructions than are contained in a Circular which accompanies each Machine, and from which a child of fourteen years may readily learn how to use and keep them in the best condition. It is many times used and more kept in order than other machines.

No one who has carefully examined the various patents now before the public can fail of seeing that this Machine is the best adapted to all in use to do the family.

It is impossible for this stitch to rip by accident; and when it is desirable to rip it can be done by simply pulling the end of the thread, when the whole will rip out. The stitch is so firmly locked that it is equally impossible for it to be ripped except the operator. The seam, compared to that of any other stitch.

There is hardly any class of family sewing, except the finest cambric and sewing on the buttons, but what this machine will do, and do it in the most substantial manner. Even the woven Jaconet thickness of cotton sewing, using the finest thread, with neatness and fidelity, and with a capability of sewing uncommonly fast, the same Machine will sew, with the same thread, the heaviest of heavy Ticking, Sail Cloth, Tents, Awnings, Carpets, Boots and Shoes, and all the intermediate sizes of fabrics, cotton, linen and flax thread, all can sewed with the same Machine, and with the same needle.

The Machine embroiders beautifully, and will hem, run and gather, with other kinds of machines, and all other machines cannot perform, can be had with a common needle.

Each Machine will be furnished with a full set of Needles, Screw Driver, Oil Can, Thread, Instruction Book, &c., &c., and will be warranted for three years.

Orders by mail promptly will be attended to. Orders for Machines, Needles, Thread, Oil, &c., should be addressed to the General Agent, Box 1,000, Quebec, C. E.

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.

J. W. DUCKER, Proprietor.

IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become no great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

Statement of Dr. Wilson
BEFORE THE UNIVERSITY COMMITTEE.

Daniel Wilson, L. L. D., Professor of History and English Literature, University College, Toronto, made the following statement before the University Committee of the House of Assembly:—

Had I addressed you at an earlier stage, the many details of the course of study, the matriculation examinations, the honor work, &c., which have been objected to, would have naturally formed subjects of comment by me, but they have already been so ably dealt with by the Vice Chancellor of the University, that I feel myself at liberty to omit much, which at an earlier period I should have dropped it my duty to submit to this Committee. . . . .

In reference to the whole system of options, I am surprised that the gentlemen who advocate the interests of Victoria and Queen's Colleges fail to perceive that, so far from involving any injustice to affiliated Colleges with an inferior staff to University College, they are the very means of placing all on equality. Under the University system if the cost of maintaining the College in a state of efficiency be properly ascertained, with some regard to future requirements, and whatever be the legitimate objects on which to expend the surplus funds, the College can advance no claim to them. How far, however, it therefore follows either that the University Act designed, or that wisdom requires, that such surplus funds should be divided among the denominational Colleges, "either now established, or which may be established in Upper Canada," is a question on other grounds, to which I shall, with your permission, direct attention, as a point of vital importance in its relations to any comprehensive National Scheme of Education.

In the memorial presented on behalf of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference to the Legislative Assembly, praying for an investigation into the manner in which the University Act has been administered, the memorialists declare their entire approval of our Canadian "National School system." Nevertheless, they affirm that "the same considerations of fitness, economy, and patriotism which justify the State in co-operating with each school municipality to support a day-school, require it to co-operate with each religious persuasion, according to its own educational works, to support a College. The experience of all Protestant countries shows that it is, and has been, as much the province of a religious persuasion to establish a College, as it is for a municipality to establish a day-school; and the same experience shows that while pastoral and parental care can be exercised for the religious instruction of children residing at home and attending a day school, that care cannot be exercised over youth residing away from home, and pursuing their higher education except in a College, where the pastoral and parental care can be daily combined.

That the experience of Protestant countries is entirely misrepresented in the above statement will be best shown by a reference to recent University reforms at home. An appeal to examples of Oxford and Cambridge on these points is out of place in the present inquiry—if for no other reasons—on this ground, that, so far as these from being educational institutions open to the people at large, they have been until recently exclusively, and still to a great extent, limited to one favored denomination, while they are fitted for the wealthy alone—the lowest estimated cost for a student during the academic year being £750. Nevertheless, although they are still recognized appendages of the Church of England, the whole tendency of recent changes has been towards the removal of their denominational features, and their restoration to the nation at large, with an distinction of sect or party. In Scotland, however, where the Universities are strictly people's Colleges, adapted to the educational wants, and to the pecuniary means of the great mass of the community, recent proceedings furnish the best illustration of "the experience of Protestant countries," in reference to its being the supposed "province of a religious persuasion to establish a College."

The Scottish Presbyterian Church being the legally recognized religious persuasion in that country, its Church Courts exercised the denominational oversight over the Colleges of the country; and no Professor could be inducted into a chair without first signing the Westminster Confession of Faith. The consequence was, that, during the greater part of the present century, the denominational restrictions thus imposed on Protestant cause to be recognized as one of the greatest educational grievances, and a serious bar to the filling of University chairs with the men best qualified for the various branches of secular education. After a long protracted struggle, and while these denominational superstitions and tests were still in force, the Free Church Presbyterians subscribed a sum of £20,000 sterling, and founded New College, Edinburgh,—not a mere Theological College, but for general instruction. Chairs of Natural History, Logic, Metaphysics, and Moral Philosophy were filled by able men, for whose salaries were provided on a more liberal scale than those now paid to the Professors of University College, Toronto; a Chair of Chemistry was also in contemplation, and a complete organization was then provided for the permanent establishment of a rival Denominational College.

Fortunately for Scotland, at this stage of the University system the Act was passed which, by throwing all religious tests for the Secular Chairs, entirely deprived them of their denominational character. In the Session of Universities as they were framed, the Theological Faculty ranks as a part of the Established Church; but in the Faculties of Arts, Law, and Medicine every candidate, of whatever religious denomination, is admitted to all the Classes, may read in its rooms to compete for the Secular Bursaries, and to carry off the Honors and Degrees. Under the University system of Scotland, the whole of University College thus ... all their ... advantages ... of Modern Languages and Natural Sciences. Permit me to add that an opinion is more unfounded than that which supposes that the Professors of University College desire any monopoly of the University of Toronto, its Exhibitionerships, Scholarships, or other privileges. The very article above referred to, was written with the earnest desire to bring about a union of Canadian Colleges under one University, as I venture to hope may be perceived by any candid reader who will peruse it as a whole, and not in imperfect and detached extracts.

But it is a singularly one-sided view of the case, for the advocates of the interests of Victoria College to protest indignantly at certain Professors of University College—four in all,—being admitted to the Senate of the University, to which their College is attached, and for which alone it was from its students, while there were sitting on that same Board the members of another, and independent University, which disclaimed all collegiate relation to it. Before University had more than its President on the Senate, there sat on that Board the Rev. Mr. Nellus, Principal of Victoria College, the Rev. Dr. Ryerson, a member of its College Board; and Dr. Barrett—whom it has been found convenient to represent as a Teacher in Upper Canada College—but why, it is well known, never had a seat at the Senate in any other capacity than as President of Dr. Rolph's, or the Toronto School of Medicine; and who, as such, took his seat for the first time to represent the Medical Faculty of Victoria College at the meetings of the University of Toronto, while its students were systematically prevented from graduating there. It may sound very plausible to those who know nothing about the facts of the case to talk of the injustice of four Professors sitting on a Board numbering 43 members, which had the entire control of their courses of teaching and system of study. Let it be remembered, however, that until they were added to it, the endowments of the Senate frequently presented the anomaly of a University and College controlled in all their arrangements by those who systematically withheld, not only the students of Cobourg, but the Medical students of Toronto, from the very University over which they exercised so much control. Had Victoria, Queen's or Trinity College, actually recognized the University as such while maintaining a thorough independence as separate Colleges, the Senate would never have been driven to the necessity of giving so large a share in the oversight of the University examinations to Professors of University College. If, as seems inevitable in the present condition of Canada, Professors must be appointed examiners, they would have been selected equally from all the Colleges, so as to secure a thorough impartiality, but it is a proposition which no reasonable man could entertain, that the Professors of such Colleges should—as they now do—examine their own students, confer degrees on them by right of their own University powers, and even establish a faculty at the seat of the University of Toronto, so as to confer the degrees of Victoria College on Toronto Students, and yet that they should also be the Governors and Examiners, or electors of Examiners, of the University they disown. Had the various denominational Colleges acted up to the idea implied by the adoption of the University of London, with its numerous and varied privately-endowed Colleges, as the model of the Canadian Provincial University, the system could easily have been worked so as to satisfy all as to the thorough impartiality in the constitution of the Senate, the appointment of Examiners, and the distribution of honors and prizes. Had they done so cordially, moreover, it might have been more difficult to resist their claims for some division of the funds. But on the contrary the Provost of Trinity refused to take his seat on the Senate; the Principal of Queen's practically adopted the same course; and the Principal of Victoria—while sharing in the Government of the University, and fixing the course of studies of the College—only lent the aid of his wisdom and experience, but refused all practical co-operation. Nevertheless, the Senate, in its anxious desire to secure a thoroughly impartial system of examination, has, in spite of those obstacles, appointed Professors of both Victoria and Queen's Colleges as its examiners, as it has selected others wherever they could be found at once competent and impartial.

Again, let me say for myself and my colleagues in University College, we have no desire to monopolize the endowments of the Provincial University. Let the just and proper Arts, Law, and Medicine, every trace denominational oversight has been removed. The last relic of it has been swept away, during the past year, by the Act which throws the Principalships of the Universities open to laymen, without respect to their denominational views or religious opinions. Now, accordingly, in the Scotch Universities, as in our Canadian Provincial College, "no religious tests or professions of religious faith are required of any Professor or Lecturer, nor are any religious observances according to the forms of any particular religious denomination imposed on them." Thus all denominational oversight and control have been withdrawn from them, but so far this has been from disunifying the large and influential non-conformist denominations, that in consequence of the very change, the New College, Edinburgh, has greatly dropped its secular character, as chairs of Metaphysics, Logic, Moral Philosophy, or Natural History; and has voluntarily assumed the character of a mere Theological Faculty for its own denominational, while its Theological students now take their Arts Course at the National University.

In Edinburgh there are Theological Colleges or Institutions in connection with the Free Church, the United Presbyterians the Convention, the Congregationalists, and Baptists; but all are equally without any distinction, in the status and the University. The same is the case of the other Scottish Universities, and it is regarded as one of the special advantages of the system, that the Theological Students of all denominations find their intellectual training in common, and less theological ferment is felt among the various Sections in the Church, than would otherwise be the case.

The Queen's College, Kingston, is purely the educational institution of the denomination under whose control its existence shown by the report presented to the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of Canada, on the 25th of May last; which, if reported correctly in the public press, stated the number of students in attendance as 11 in Theology, and 53 in Arts; but added: in all 45 are studying for the Ministry.

Credit has been repeatedly claimed of late for Victoria College, but it has no taste; such a statement is a mere play upon words. What real difference is there between requiring that a Professor shall sign the prescribed creed of a Church—be it the thirty-nine articles, or the Westminster Confession of Faith,—or that he shall satisfy the Wesleyan Conference, or other Ecclesiastical Court? In reality, the latter is the more stringent of the two. There is, of course, no test for students. It is only too well known, that not in the Methodist Colleges only, but also in Roman Catholic Colleges, all are welcome who are prepared to submit to their teaching. But from the Returns made to Parliament in 1856, the denominational statistics present the following significant figures relative to the matriculated students of Victoria College:

Wesleyan Methodists,	28
Presbyterians	3
Church of England	1
Baptist	1

Again, taking the whole pupils in the institution, there were only 39 belonging to other denominations, including children of the preparatory school, while 109 were Wesleyan Methodists.

It is stated in the Conference Memorial, that no aid is asked "towards the support of any Theological School or Theological Chair in Victoria College?" and Mr. Nellus, in answer to the question, "Is there any Theological Chair, or Divinity Students in Victoria College?" replies, "Neither. We have established [amongst the College who are preparing for the Ministry, but are not pursuing Theological studies, but general studies; and are not known in the College as Divinity students, but as general students. They receive an allowance or consideration from the funds in any shape whatsoever.' It appears, however, from the 7th of the Miscellaneous Resolutions adopted by the Wesleyan Conference at its last session, that a system Preachers on trial are allowed to attend Victoria College for two years during their probation, the two years shall be counted but as one year in their probation;" and the successful candidate regularly admitted to Conference includes the query, "what has been collected for the education of Ministers?" Again, in answer to the thirteenth question: "How are the Ministers and Preachers stationed for the ensuing year?" "Under-graduates and students" to the number of twenty, are named in the Cobourg District as at Victoria College. In the previous year, 1858, they numbered seventeen; and in the Report furnished by the President of Victoria College to the Conference at the same year, he remarks: "Judging from present indications, the College is destined to furnish many valuable accessions to the Christian Ministry, and the attention of the Conference and Church is earnestly invited to this important result, as a reason for more ardent and united exertions in behalf of the Institution." It is obvious, therefore, that whatever difference may be entertained as to the designation of the "preachers on trial during their probation" at Victoria College, but in the Wesleyan denominational College, supplying for the Wesleyan Methodist Church the same purposes as Queen's College does for the Presbyterian Church of Canada.

Accordingly, in the Report of the Principal of Victoria College to the Wesleyan Conference, Mr. Nellus say: "It is necessary to show that our College is a connexional necessity—that it is an essential part of our machinery as a Church—that without it we shall either loose our youth, or retain them in a state of social inferiority—that without it our Ministers will suffer in numbers and efficiency—that without it, in fine, we shall be unequal to the great work God has assigned us in Christianizing this extensive country." All this is highly laudable, in a strictly denominational point of view, and worthy of praise when affected by the denomination to be thus benefitted. But it cannot be the function of the State to prevent the Wesleyan Church losing its youth as Church members, any more than to assist it in other religious and missionary work; unless it is also prepared to re-assert the principal it has disowned in the abolition of all State provision for religion in Upper Canada.

Again, returning to the consideration of statements already quoted from the memorial of the Wesleyan Conference, a complete fallacy is involved in the attempt to apply certain characteristics of our Common Schools to the whole provincial system of education. It is true our Common Schools being easily multiplied in every district, are mere day-schools; so that the attendance there does not deprive the pupils of daily parental or pastoral care and religious instruction; but such is not, and never can be the case, with the Grammar Schools, the Provincial Normal School, or the Model Grammar School. In order to attend such of these, pupils necessarily leave their parents' homes, and are placed, some of them under a system greatly less conducive to strict moral and religious oversight, than that which is secured by the system of University College, as applied to its resident students.

In the Model Grammar School, for example, established under the authority of the Chief Superintendent of Education at Toronto, it is expressly provided that pupils shall be removed from every part of the Province, and thus necessarily be removed from daily parental and pastoral instruction and oversight. Yet its establishment and supervision are equally independent of any religious persuasion; and it is placed under the authority of the Council of Public instruction, a public board constituted of nearly the same principle as the Senate of the Toronto University. The same remarks equally apply to the Normal School, as which is entrusted the all important function of training teachers for the whole of the Common Schools of the Province; nevertheless, no difficulty appears to have arisen hitherto from the adoption, in these institutions, of one national system, instead of the Provinces maintaining at reasonable expense, one efficient Model Grammar School, Normal School, and College, which are abundantly sufficient to meet the present demand for the departments of higher education embraced by them, it must multiply such institutions in the same ratio as all denominational Colleges, "now established, or which may be established, in Upper Canada; or even in each city of Upper Canada.

The system pursued by the British Parliament in all recent reforms of higher education, as exemplified, not only by the new Scottish Universities Act, but also by the establishment of the Queen's University, in Ireland, and the London University in England, abundantly proves how thoroughly British Statesmen are alive to the importance of all the members of a free community receiving their secular education in national, rather than in denominational institutions, and being thereby trained to co-operate in all the great public duties that devolve on a free people. The Queen's University in Ireland is designed to extend the same advantages of university degrees and honors to students of all denominations, as is done by Toronto University; but the public endowment is entirely devoted to the support non-denominational Queen's Colleges, founded on precisely the same principle as our Provincial College at Toronto. In England also, the London University confers degrees and university honors on students presenting themselves by its examination, from Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, Wesleyan Methodists, Congregationalists, Baptist, and other denominational colleges; but they neither receive any claim on any other share of the University funds, excepting the common right enjoyed, not only by all their students, but by every one possessed of the requisite matriculation, whensoever required to compete for the University Scholarships.

In these respects, therefore, the University of Toronto fully carries out the plan adopted by the London University, and that by the Queen's University, of Ireland. It also fulfils the principles of denominations as set forth in the preamble of the statute, that "it is expedient that provision should be made for affording to persons of all religious denominations in this Province, the means of obtaining a literary education, and for granting degrees in the several Faculties, to persons who have pursued their studies in the said University, and have passed such examinations as may be prescribed by the Senate thereof, and that no religious test or qualification be required of any person obtaining any degree, or admitted to any office, or to the enjoyment of any emolument in the said University, or in any College affiliated thereto." Nothing can be more explicit than the declaration that "

HEROISM OF MADAME LAVALETTE.

We have seen how successfully the Countess of Natchitoches effected her husband's escape from prison by the equally outrageous manner that M. Lavalette escaped from an [illegible] death, by the ingenuity and affection of his wife, under circumstances still more unfavorable to the execution of such a project.

It was in the year 1815 that M. Lavalette was condemned, for his adherence to the cause of Bonaparte, to suffer death, — The eve of the day of execution, the 24th of December, had already arrived, and all hope of saving him had been abandoned, except by one heroic woman alone.

Madame Lavalette's health had been very severely impaired by her previous sufferings; and for several weeks preceding, in order to avoid the movement of her carriage, she had used a sedan-chair. About half-past three, on the afternoon of the 23rd she arrived at the Conciergerie, seated as usual in this chair, and clothed in a flowered riding-coat of set merino, with a large black hat and feathers on her head. She was accompanied by her daughter, a young lady of about twelve years of age, and an elderly woman, attached to M. Lavalette's service, of the name of Dutoit. The chair was ordered to wait for her at the gate of the Conciergerie.

At five o'clock Jacques Eberle, one of the wicket-keepers of the Conciergerie, who had been specially appointed by the keeper of the prison to the guard and service of Lavalette, took his dinner to him, of which Madame and Mademoiselle Lavalette, and the widow Dutoit, partook.

After dinner, which lasted an hour, Eberle served up coffee, and left Lavalette's up rincent, with orders not to return till he was rung for.

Towards seven o'clock the bell rang.—Roquette, the gaoler, was at that moment near the fire-place of the hall, with Eberle to whom he immediately gave orders to go into Lavalette's chamber. Roquette heard Eberle open the door which led to that chamber, and immediately after he saw three persons, dressed in female attire, advance, who were followed by Eberle.—The person whom he took to be Madame Lavalette was attired in a dress exactly the same as she was, in every particular; and to all outward appearance, no one could have imagined but that they saw the lady herself passing before them. A white handkerchief covered the face of this person, who seemed to be sobbing heavily, while Mademoiselle Lavalette, who walking by his side, entered the most lamentable cries. Everything presented the spectacle of a family giving way to the feelings of a last adieu. The keeper, applied and deceived by the disguise, and by the seeming light of two lamps, had not the power, or he afterwards said, to take away the handkerchief which concealed the features of the principal individual in the group, and instead of performing his duty, presented his hand to the person, (as he had been used to do to Madame Lavalette,) whom he conducted, along with the other two persons, to the last wicket. Eberle then stepped forward, and rang to call Madame Lavalette's chair. It came instantly; the feigned Madame Lavalette stepped into it, and was slowly carried forward, followed by Mademoiselle Lavalette and the widow Dutoit. When they reached the Quay des Orfevres, they stopped; Lavalette came out of the chair, and in an instant disappeared.

Soon after, the keeper, Roquette, entered the chamber of Lavalette, where he saw no one, but heard noise one behind the screen, which formed part of the furniture of this apartment. He concluded it was Lavalette, and, without further speaking to him, left the room, and locked the door. Adieu a few minutes he returned a second time, and called; no one answered. He began to fear some mischief, advanced beyond the screen, and there saw Madame Lavalette. "Il est parti," she triumphantly ejaculated. "Ah! Madame," exclaimed Roquette, "you have deceived me." He wished to run out to give the alarm, but Madame Lavalette caught hold of him by the coat-sleeve.

"Stay, Monsieur Roquette stay!"

No, Madame, it is not to be borne."

A struggle ensued, in which the coat was torn but Roquette at last forced himself away, and gave the alarm.

Lavalette, after having escaped from the Conciergerie, was still far from being out of danger. He had to get out of Paris,—out of France; and a more difficult achievement it is scarcely possible to conceive; for the moment his escape was discovered, nothing could exceed the activity with which he was sought after by the agents of the government. Bills describing his person with the greatest exactness were quickly distributed all over France; and there was not a postmaster, postillion, or gendarme on any of the roads, who had not one of them in his pocket. Lavalette sought the means of escape, not among those of his countrymen whose he knew to be attached to the cause for which he was persecuted, nor even from those whose affection or gratitude bound to his family, but among those strangers whose presence, as conquerors, in his native soil, he had so much cause to lament. He had heard that to a truly British heart the pleadings of humanity were never made in vain; and he has now to try the experiment, in his own person, of the truth of the eulogium.

On the 2nd of January, he sent a person with an unsigned letter to Mr. Michael Brune, an English gentleman, resident at Paris; in which, after extolling the goodness of the times, the writer said, he was induced by the confidence inspired, to disclose to him a great secret—that Lavalette was still in Paris; adding that he (Brune) alone could save him, and requesting to send a letter to a certain place, stating whether he would embark in the generous design. Mr. Brune was entranced with consternation; he spoke on the subject to two other countrymen, Sir Robert Wilson and Captain Hutchinson; and the result was that they joined in a determination to effect the unfortunate fugitive every assistance in their power to complete his escape. The answer which they received for this purpose was received with complete success. Lavalette was conveyed in safety into a certain territory, where he lived in great obscurity, until the fury of the party persecution which pulled him, had exhausted itself, he was restored by a free pardon, to his country, his family and his friends.—From the Memoirs of Count Lavalette, subsequently written by himself, it, however appears, that the noble-hearted Madame Lavalette, did not live across the prison of her husband's place. Her mind, at once crushed and inspired by the presence of danger, and with the alertness of peril; and when Lavalette, after five years' exile, returned to France, he found his faithful and tenderly wife the same as he had left her.

The tribute due to the conjugal heroism of Madame Lavalette was cordially paid, both by the people and the government. The people on every public occasion, testified the high sense they entertained of the heroism of the lady, by the enthusiasm with which they greeted her appearance in the streets; and the government, by the distinguished honors which it paid to her husband. troops have abandoned the Fortresses of Palermo and Trapanese, and have retired within the citizens. Considerable excitement prevailed at Palermo. Thirty thousand insurgents have joined Garibaldi.—Barricades being daily erected. Palermo is in full insurrection.

Palermo, 20th.—Garibaldi has been put to flight by the Neapolitan troops at Catalafeo.

The troops are intrenched in semi-circle round Palermo.

Naples, 20th.—The Neapolitan troops were repulsed in the contest of the 15th and 16th.

The position of Monreale, which commands Palermo, has been intrested by Garibaldi.

Rebels of insurgents are marching on to Palermo.

The Proclamation of Gen. Lamoriciere concerning the amnesty and vice-Royalty has had no effect.

Popular manifestations take place repeatedly.

It is believed that Palermo would shortly be evacuated by the Royal troops.

Rumors are current that part of Palermo is in the hands of the populace.

The Globe's Paris correspondent says that both the Courts of Naples and Rome are compelled to admit that the telegram from Naples of the 18th was false, and that Garibaldi beat the King's troops at Catalafeo, and drove them back into Palermo.

Six patriot priests had been arrested at Palermo.

In contradiction of the above despatches we have the following official telegram:—

Naples, May 20th.—No other encounter has taken place between the Royal troops and the Garibaldians. Two strong columns are pursuing the remnants of the dispersed Garibaldians. The inhabitants remain tranquil. The order and valor of the troops are beyond all praise.

A Vienna letter says that three Austrian men-of-war had been sent to Naples, and it was said they would bring away the King in case of a revolution in the capital.

A telegram dated Rome 20th announces that a company of Pontifical gendarmes had encountered 340 Garibaldians on the 19th, near Montefiascon. A severe contest ensued, in which the Garibaldians had six killed, among whom was a brother of Orsini, and twenty-five wounded. The gendarmes had three killed. The band was dispersed and driven back into Tuscany.

The Neapolitan Government, in a despatch received at Turin, holds the Sardinian government responsible for the operations of Garibaldi in Sicily. The receipt of this despatch had given rise to the report that diplomatic relations between Sardinia and Naples had been suspended.

A message from Palermo of the 20th gives rumors that Garibaldi had obtained a decided victory at Monreale.

Rumors are also current at Turin that the 17th regiment of Neapolitans was completely beaten by Garibaldi, while the 7th was compelled to lay down its arms.

It is confirmed that the 6th regiment refused to fire on the insurgents.

Popular demonstrations in favor of Garibaldi and the Sicilian movement was held in St. Martin's Hall, London, on the 22nd. The hall was crowded, and great enthusiasm prevailed.

FRANCE.

The Moniteur announces that in the Legislative body a project of law relative to sugar and coffee, was agreed to—233 against 9 votes.

The effective force of the French army will be increased by 10,000 men, in consequence of the incorporation into it of the conscripts of 1859.

The Paris correspondent of the London Herald says the object of the visit of the Grand Duke Nicholas to Napoleon, resulted the conclusion of the treaty between France and Russia on the Eastern question, and that this treaty was signed on the 10th.

An important pamphlet was to appear in Paris in a day or two, which may be regarded as an exposition of the views of the Hungarian leaders on the present movement against Austria. They declare that any reconciliation with the House of Hapsburg is impossible. Hungary henceforth must form a free, self-governed and independent state.

Flour and wheat in Paris were slightly easier, although concessions were with difficulty obtained owing to the lightness of stocks.

The group of isles on the French coast opposite and within an hour's sail of Jersey were to be strongly fortified and rendered capable of sheltering a fleet which might be ready for any emergency.

The Duke de Grammont arrived in Paris from Rome.

A despatch of the French naval force to the Adriatic was spoken of.

The Bourse was firmer; rentes advanced to 69f.

ITALY.

The treaty of Zurich has been approved of by the Sardinian Chambers—215 against 16.

The report of the committee on the cession of Savoy and Nice, concludes by proposing its approbation by the Chambers.

It is stated that the counter order for the French troops to remain in Rome, is owing to Garibaldi's success.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

The Russian troops in the southern provinces are said to have been placed on a war footing. They are divided three distinct corps, and were about to be reinforced by three divisions of reserve.

The Cossacks of the Black Sea, numbering 18,000 men, have been ordered to march.

The agents of the Austrian Government in the Principalities had obtained certain information that there was a concentration of Russian troops on the Pruth.

The Turkish Government was said to be taking measures which denoted serious apprehensions. She was garrisoning seaports which had never been done before.

The inhabitants of Montenegro were all prepared to take up arms to support the general revolt against the Turks.

The Porte questions the competence of the power to institute the enquiry proposed by Russia.

INDIA.

CHINA.

Private telegrams, of 14th April, received England, conveying the important intelligence that the inhabitants of England and France had been rejected, and that the blockade of all the northern ports, with the exception of Shanghai, had consequently been established. The whole army would be ready to move about the 25th of April.

Another Chinese telegram—The steamer Sir James Hope, Captain Heatherly, at Shanghai, from Hankow, with cargo, reports that on the 28th March, the Imperialists attacked the rebels at Hankow, and after a severe engagement, in which the Imperialists had 1,000 killed and wounded, the rebels retired to Hankow, where they are now entrenched. The Imperialists have also retired to their camp on the other side of the river, where they are now entrenched. The fleet had been daily engaged with the rebels. Captain Heatherly, commanding the Mississippi fleet, consisting of two steamers, and several gun-boats, with Admiral Hope on board, left Hankow on the 30th for Shanghai, and left on the 2nd instant. The rebels are reported to have lost heavily, and the Imperialists have taken 40 guns. Trade at Hankow was entirely suspended. The rebels were in possession of the city, and the Imperialists had retired to their camp on the other side of the river. The fleet had been daily engaged with the rebels. ARRIVAL OF THE "CITY OF BALTIMORE."

The City of Baltimore, with dates the same as the Nova Scotian, put into St. John, N. F., on the 2nd inst. She brings some additional items of news.

The Palermo province is full of insurrectionists. Six thousand Sicilians have joined Garibaldi.

It is rumoured that Austria, Russia and England have agreed to maintain the integrity of the Ottoman Empire.

Cavour says negotiations with France on boundaries, public debt, railways, and Savoy, are still pending.

THE DERBY.

London, May 23.—Thormanby, first; The Wizard, second; Horror, third.—Twenty horses ran.

ITALY.

Rome, 22nd.—A band of 500 volunteers have re-entered Tuscany.

A battalion of Pontifical troops fired upon each other in error, and a Captain, Lieutenant, and five soldiers were killed thereby.

Artillery had left Rome to-day, for the frontiers.

Rome, May 23.—The official journal of Rome in speaking of the affair of the 19th at Monterfa, says, that owing to the darkness of the night, the Pontifical troops wounded some of their comrades, taking them for filibusters. The Customs guards at Onano were overpowered by the filibusters who, after plundering, re-entered Tuscany. The peasantry asked to be armed.

The Papal troops will immediately leave Rome for the frontier.

Vienna, May 23.—Count Thun, Austrian Ambassador at St. Petersburg, has arrived here.

London, May 22.—Cose—Attendance unusually small event for Derby day, and all descriptions nominally as on Monday, with scarcely any business.

The Times' second edition announces that Albert Smith died this morning.

In the House of Commons, May 21st, Lord John Russel, in reply to a question, said there was no intention on the part of the Australian or Spanish Governments of interfering in the affairs of Sicily.

Paris, Saturday.—The Patrie, in speaking of the affair of Calatafino, says the volunteers, having been attacked with great vigor, energetically defended themselves, and effected a retreat in good order, leaving a certain number of killed.

According to the last advices, the insurrection was being extended and organized in a great many directions.

The same journal adds, that when the detachments which are being organized have joined the volunteers, who have disembarked at Marsala, the whole body will number 12,000 men, armed and provisioned.

M. Dourof adds that this fresh attack against the international law exposes Italy to sanguine anarchy, and compromises all Europe. He throws the responsibility on the authors and accomplices in such a criminal action.

The Marquis DeVillamarina has, in the name of Sardinia, protested against this accusation, which he says is fatal and injurious.

It is believed that Garibaldi will land at Calabria.

Palermo, May 16.—Garibaldi was at Alcamo on the 15th inst. A fight had taken place at Sioppo, in which the royal troops were repulsed. Palermo is again in a state of siege. French troops have arrived. More emigrants have disembarked in Sicily.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says it is not true that the Russian Ambassador at Turin had protested against the expedition of Garibaldi. He merely asked explanations of the Sardinian government.

The effective force of the French army will be increased next month by 10,000 men.

PARIS, Monday.

The Patrie contains a despatch announcing that Col. Pimadon had obtained a decided success against the volunteers who had entered the Roman territory.

Marseilles.—Advices from Rome state that General Lamoriciere entered that city on the 13th instant, and on the following day he despatched the second infantry and detachment of mounted gendarmes. The cause of this movement was the cause of the march of the Garibaldian upon Orbitella, the news of which caused great agitation at Rome.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says a perfect panic prevailed last week in the commercial and financial world. The pretence for the panic was founded on reports that the Russian Government was about to recommence a Menschikoff Mission and the landing of Garibaldi in Sicily. The fact is that the panic was caused by obscurity in which all political questions are involved.

M. Dourof has forwarded a circular to the diplomatic corps, bitterly accusing the Piedmontese Government of having, notwithstanding its promises, allowed bands of volunteers to be enrolled and despatched to Sicily.

The Neapolitan government intends appointing Count Trani Viceroy of Sicily.

CHINA.

Hong Kong, March 19.—Mr. Bruce is to receive a final answer from the Emperor on the 10th of April. The whole army will be ready to move about the 15th of April.

RUSSIA.

Rumors that a great number of armed merchantmen are now collected at Nicholieff are current; also that the Russian troops are being concentrated on the east coast of the Black Sea.

SOLAR ECLIPSE OF JULY 18TH.—The first of the American Expeditions for Observing the Solar Eclipse of July 18th, will leave New York to-day for Washington Territory, the others will follow, by Lebanon and the Hudson's Bay Territory at later dates, the proper stations for their observations being much nearer the line than any in our West coast. The ship will run around on the Pacific ocean and the difficulty of obtaining a suitable station in a country so densely wooded, together with the time at which the phenomenon will take place, renders favorable results extremely uncertain.

JOSEPH R. WALTON, Travelling Agent for the Counties of Northumberland, Durham, Peterborough and Victoria.

The C. W. F. M. & S. Ins. Co. was incorporated by Act of Parliament in the year 1851, solely for the purpose of meeting the wants of the Farmer by affording him protection against fire, at the lowest possible rate.

The Act of Incorporation prohibits the Directors from taking risks on Mills, Stores, or Buildings in Blocks, or any other hazardous property; and by strictly adhering to these principles, by its liberal and prompt settlement of claims, as well as by judicious management throughout, the Company has met with that success and general favor, in the several places where it has operated, which it is still its desire and effort not only to maintain, but to extend to localities not hitherto occupied by it.

The Board of Directors is composed entirely of Farmers, men who know your requirements, whose sympathies are with you, and to whose custody your interests may safely be entrusted.

Epizootic

THE CATTLE DISTEMPER.

(From the Maine Farmer, May 24th.)

We fall gained up to be obliged again to record the alarming increase of the fatal cattle disease among the herds of western Massachusetts. The disease, as we read... [illegible] ...is pronounced by all unprejudiced persons to be identical in character with the spinal disease known as the Epizootic among the horses of Windham, Cumberland and Oxford counties in this State in the fall of 1858. The disease is said to have been introduced into Massachusetts by an imported animal in the herd of Winthrop R. Chenery, of Belmont. It first attracted attention in the herd of Leonard Stoddard of North Brookfield, who lost several of his best animals. Other cows in his herd communicated by contact with other herds, until it has fatally attacked them not only throughout the town, but into contiguous neighborhoods and towns, threatening to ravage the entire agricultural portions of the State. The means placed at the disposal of the commissioners by the Legislature are manifestly inadequate to the thorough performance of the great work with which they are charged. It is thought that a sum not less than $200,000 would be necessary to enable them to circumscribe its present limits and exterminate the disease, and it is proposed to obtain an increased appropriation from the State to that amount. Meantime subscriptions are being obtained to a guarantee fund, sufficient to authorize and enable the commissioners to proceed vigorously with their work.

A meeting of the State Board of Agriculture was held in Boston on Tuesday last, for the purpose of devising some mode of action in reference to the matter. The commissioners submitted an extended statement in regard to the disease, from which we make the following extracts:

"In spite of all obstacles, the commissioners have got hampered to go to the fullest extent of their powers in the discharge of their duty. They have placed an injunction on every suspected herd. They have destroyed all that gave the slightest appearance of disease, from the poor man's single cow to the large and choice collections of the most extensive farmers. They have explored every spot which has been brought to their notice as having been in any way exposed, and have endeavored to ascertain the limits beyond which it seems impossible that the disease can have progressed.

"The central point of the infected district is the farm of Nash Brookfield, the farm of Leonard Stoddard, into which the disease was thoughtlessly and innocently introduced, and from which it has been carelessly allowed to go out. Around this spot the destruction is complete; but how small animals, indeed, being left in the unfortunate town.

"The number of persons whose cattle have been condemned or destroyed is 75. [illegible] ...animals, marked with [illegible]

"The commissioners wish they could present the Board of Agriculture and the community that their work will end here. But they can not. The fire that is wasting prairie and forest may apparently be quenched for a time; and it is only when, on the distant horizon, its terrible work is painted, and heaven and earth seem all ablaze, that the insidious and appealing power of the delusion element comes home to the heart of its partners.

"This is not the time nor the place to enter into an investigation of the history and character of the disease—that, it is hoped, may be done hereafter. But it is important that the public should know and appreciate the extent of the contagion.—That the disease is peculiar to itself there can be no doubt whatever. The same Pleuro-Pneumonia, which has been implanted in the soil which in its ordinary acceptation signifies indigestion occupying the pleura of the same time, does not by any means indicate its true character. The inflammatory stages of the disease is hardly perceptible. But throughout the substance of the lungs, and in the membrane covering the same and lining the cavity of the chest, there seems to have been diffused a morbific poison, under the influences of which the vitality of the parts are threatened with speedy destruction. The contagion is to [illegible] ...Wherever an animal has been exposed, in that animal the disease is wont to be found. Every creature that went out from Leonard Stoddard's herd carried the malady with him, and imparted it wherever he went. In no case has an animal been examined on account of its history, that the disease has not been found in a greater or less degree. Strikingly or [illegible] ...exists, the animal that carried it there can be pointed out, and his exposures traced back to that wretched calf that went from Belmont to North Brookfield. The disease is not epidemic. It is not found except as the result of contagion. It has broken out in no spot without a known and well authenticated cause. But it passes from animal to animal in its deadly career, marking every victim that comes within its fatal grasp as surely as the water of Tofana or the poison of Brinvilliers."

A number of gentlemen were present in addition to the members of the Board, whose remarks and statements in regard to the disease, and the probability of entirely eradicating it, were of the most gloomy character. The Board voted to dispense with the proposed Stock Fair next fall, and after a full discussion of the conflicting directions for the appointment of three members of the Board to advise with the Commissioners; recommending a County Society not to hold exhibitions of neat cattle the ensuing autumn; and authorizing the members of the Board to attend the meetings of local societies, at which they may be appointed to collect subscriptions, were adopted. A resolution was also adopted to [illegible] ...of the subject laid before Congress, and memorializing government aid in suppressing the evil.

In a circular issued [illegible] ...publicity to the people of Massachusetts, the Commissioners say:—

The undersigned beg leave to state to all who feel interested in the agricultural and general prosperity of Massachusetts, that the fatal disease appearing [illegible] ...in North Brookfield, Worcester county, has thus far been confined to [illegible] ...the most effective measures, and those only, within specific authority conferred by the Legislature, have been adopted to arrest its progress. It is believed that [illegible] ...has been confined to the herds in which it originated, and that the greatest distance of the animals that had any appearance even the slightest, and that the greatest distance of the animals that had any appearance even the slightest, and that the greatest distance of the animals that had any appearance even the slightest

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.

E. W. BROOKE, Proprietor.

ELEGANTLY situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best class of visitors of both Provinces) become so much a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to an Hotel in this city. The whole of the beds have, at a great expense, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION may the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

GLIMPSES OF HIGHLAND SUPERSTITION;

OR,

THE WEIRD WORLD OF MY CHILDHOOD.

By Donald M'Intosh.

O Superstition! though hoar
By Knowledge's gaze cast out,
And made legally to retire
Before Her prudent rod;
Yet do thy visions dread unrein
To me who breath'd the mountain air,
And sought the red-deer's covert lair;
'Mid wilds but seldom trod.

Wilds haunted by the lone Banshee
Where shepherds in the gloaming see,
As homeward hums the laden bee,
And midges skim the 'dike;
When all beside is silence sleeps;
Save cascades rushing down the steeps,
And o'er, whose music keeps
Perpetually an ake.

Then forth there hostlist the spirit host
Of goblin, fairies, witch—and ghost
Of wanderer in the snow drift lost,
When mostly raved the storm—
Lest where now oft with smothered wail,
And hollow eye, and visage pale,
And noiseless step along the vale,
Is seen that shadowy form!

And quaintly dressed in robes of green,
Hither may then be dimly seen
A freedom on the mystic Queen
Upon some moony knoll;
Or with fleet-pointed arrow keen
Waylaying mortals who in vain
May there be nothing to regain
The child the fairies stole!

The cause is changed—and, hark that sound,
Yon yelpy cave a tongue hath found,
And hunter's voice and bay of hound,
Are on the night-wind borne;
And shadow of Fingal and his band,
Who once inhabited the land,
Seem issue forth with bow in hand
And far resounding horn.

The chase awakes the sleeping night—
The pleasure stag bounds far in flight—
The traveller, shuddering with affright,
Prays heaven his path to guide;
The fist sucks out his den secure,
The house-dog crouches on the floor,
While that along the heather moors
These sports at heaven glide.

Bosh, superstition, is thy might—
That dead these people Scotia' sight;
Or have I fleed with dread delight
Its glamour and its gloom.
'Tis true we have no wannabie here,
No haunted dells, no ghosts to fear,
Yet do I pet the lore revere
My own loved Highland Home.

Dread Power! evil I mind the day
When thoughts of vengeful ghost or fay
Suilleed my wayward steps to stray
From evil deed or crime.
Let Sceptics, if they will, ignore—
Better that souls to save the power
Believe the truth and something more
Than both alike discard.

Kingston, C. W.

The Man who lost his Memory.

(Translated from the French.)

I.

Upon a morning in May, 1613, a lady, still youthful, directed her steps, following her two children, toward the little churchyard of the town of Harlem. This lady's paleness, her inflamed eyelids, and the profound melancholy that rest upon her countenance, announced one of those heavy sorrows over which time seems to be ashamed to scatter useless poppies. Her children, the eldest of whom was scarcely four years old, manifested the most carelessness of their age. They had been astonished to see in mourning the chateau, the servants, their mother and themselves, although no affected words had told them, one day, upon showing them a hier covered with a pall:

"Children, you have no father."

A month after, they were playing no more.

Is it told that the sorrows of youth are too shocking, that God has not permitted us to vitiate this memory of which? Perhaps. True it is that these children had already forgotten why they were clad in mourning.

As the lady reached the little church-yard many persons loudly imprecated—curiously enough, neither violently nor sorrowfully—the lady was that had just gone by, with a look so sad, and with such evident grief.

"The lady who passed," said an old beggar, "is the widow of Johan Dorer, some three months dead, and she visits Monsieur to his Majesty, the Emperor of Germany."

II.

Johan Dorer sprung from a very humble family—in fact, his forefathers were shepherds. Johan was an extremely studious scholar, but even as a boy, the noble of his sports, gave evidence of a strong desire for domination. He seemed to be born up by ambition.

At fifteen years he was the schoolmaster of the masters; their pride, even. Nevertheless, Johan was not at all hated by his young comrades. He exhibited to them a cruelty, ingenuity, and sometimes providence, the oddness caused them to their place. He was lost at all commencements, and looked haughtiness upon the little schoolmates who made him happily endured their blandishments with frank, submissive joy, and the dreamer with others he purposely contracted himself, rendered the domination the most absolute.

One evening young Dorer, led away by the enormity of schools and meditation, wandered over the heath that elevated itself in front of the town, dreaming fantasies, of the greatness to which his pride aspired, to which he could never hope to attain; the commonness of the soil and blooms grew about him. One of the youngest of the children, upon the point of [illegible] Johan Dorer [illegible] Valley of Thistles," [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM 22.

The postage of each on for 12 months equals $\frac{A+B}{2}$ the postage of 40 cents; consequently £17 divided by this sum gives A's time = 153-160 year.
In like manner B's time = 1 3-100 year.
" C's " = 1 1-20 year.
" D's " = 9-10 year.
but as the pasture was rented only for 12 months the problem is impossible.

E. P. Ford.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM 22.

8 plus 4 = 12, now 12 squared plus 4 = 148; from this sum take the square of 8, and divide the difference by twice the distance the ladder fell, that is by 4, and we obtain the height of the wall = 21 feet.

E. P. Ford.

Mr. Editor :—Mr Rothwell asserts that problem 16 can be solved, but his assertions without proof are worthless. I shall now prove the problem impossible and let him prove the contrary if he can.

DEMONSTRATION.

As the values of X and Y in problem 16 cannot be whole numbers, and the fractions must have a common denominator; and X ⁿ plus Y cannot be a whole number because the fractional parts have not a common denominator and therefore the numbers when added cannot make a whole number—and even if they could Y ⁿ plus X could not be a whole number, therefore the problem is impossible.

E. P. Ford.

Mr. Editor :—I have examined the solutions of Problems 18 and 19, and must confess that neither answers my idea of accuracy. In No. 18 it is said that 5.6 the increased numbers of passengers got out without help, but this includes the ferryman. Now 9.6 30 = 25, but 1 is the ferryman; therefore 24 were passengers, leaving 6 to be helped out. Also in the solution I find that Y = 6 and 23 Y = the number that got out without help. But 23 Y = 138; the fractions also do not appear but the numerator of the first must be 12, and this increased by the common difference 5 for next two terms must be 17 and 22 for the others. Now what are these fractions to be fractions of? Are they fractions of the 30 passengers, or are the the numbers who got out to be numerators and those helped out denominators? If so, placing the first denominator at unity we have 12.1, 17.5, 22.25, but these numbers are far too large. In short, whatever way I look at this solution in conjunction with the problem, inconsistencies and contradictions stare me in the face; there are plenty of other things equally unintelligible in it. It is perfectly useless to tell me that I don't understand the thing. If I had any chance of [illegible] I should understand it as quickly as God felt it, I have had as much experience in this line as most, and I think I may, without boasting, say that I have a moderate share of ability, if not in writing at least in arithmetic and mathematics generally.

E. Rothwell, Hope.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM 14.

(We owe an apology to the author of problem 14, for the errors that occurred in it. Following is the correct form :—

X plus Y equal 180
Y plus X equal 270

SOLUTION.

Assume X to equal 12, then X² equal 169 and Y equal 11. And 11 plus 12 equal 134, but should be 270. Error; 136. Next take X equal 15, then X² equal 225 and Y = — 45, but = 45² equal 2025, to which add 15 and it will equal 2040; this is too large, therefore an error; 13 is therefore too small and 15 too large, and as X must be a whole number as Mr. Ford has very properly said X must be 14, and X² equal 196. But Y = 120 — X² = 180 — 196 = —16, and —16² equal 256, to which add 14 and it equal 270; therefore X = 14, and Y = —16.

That the above is a correct solution, and found according to acknowledged rules I refer the curious to Bonnycastles Rules for the resolving of Algebraic Equations by Approximation.

I could but tell any one acquainted with Algebra that negative quantities are whole numbers as well as positive.

Problems 20 and 21 were both done by a boy in my school in less than a minute's time.

E. Rothwell, Hope.

A correspondent says—I see too much quackery in your correspondents to resort to Algebra. Arithmetic, written and mental, is well worth cultivating, and I will endeavor to advance in one. In another year or so arithmetic will be laid aside with my Granny's pewter plates, and like the pewter plates nothing better will take its place.

A Solution to problem 18, by Mr. J. Stratton, of Springville, has been received. We regret that want of space compels us to leave it over, together with a number of problems, till another issue.

Local Hot Potatoes!—A gang of Yankee horse-thieves are reported to be practising about in this county. Mr. W. DENTIST,

Late of Brockville, C. W.

BEGS to inform the inhabitants of Peterboro' and vicinity, that he has opened an office, and will remain until the last of the month, and also every month from the 15th to the last, when he will be prepared to perform all operations in his profession with skill, and to the satisfaction of persons who may honor him with their patronage.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH

Inserted on the latest and most scientific principles, from a single tooth to a whole set, on Gold, Silver, Chloropathic and Vulcanized Rubber.

Particular attention paid to Gold fillings, or filling teeth after the nerve has become exposed.

Mr. O'D. has paid great attention to the formation and growth of the temporary and permanent teeth, so that it will be to the interest of parents and guardians if they find anything wrong with their children's teeth to consult him without delay in order to prevent the many irregularities to which they are peculiarly subject.

Front Tee is which are too much decayed for a Gold filling he fills with the Adontoplasmia, or Crystal Cement, it saves the tooth a long time and does not cause it to discolour.

All operations warranted to give satisfaction, and at prices corresponding with equally good work elsewhere.

JOSEPH R. WALTON, Travelling Agent for the Counties of Northumberland, Durham, Peterborough and Victoria.

The C. W. F. M. & S. Ins. Co. was incorporated by Act of Parliament in the year 1851, solely for the purpose of meeting the wants of the Farmer by affording him protection against fire, at the lowest possible rate.

The Act of Incorporation prohibits the Directors from taking risks on Mills, Stores, or Buildings in Towns, or any other hazardous property; and by strictly adhering to these principles, by its liberal and prompt settlement of claims, as well as by judicious management throughout, the Company has met with that success and general favor in the several places where it has operated, which it is still its desire and effort earnestly to maintain, but to extend to localities not hitherto occupied by it.

The Board of Directors is composed entirely of Farmers, men well known for their business habits, whose sympathies are with you, and to whose custody your interests may safely be entrusted.

SMITH AND HARVEY.

A BY-LAW for regulating Statute Labor in the United Townships of Smith and Harvey, for defining the duties of Assessors of Highways, and those who work under them, and for repealing a By-Law.

Be it enacted by the authority of the Municipal Council of the United Townships of Smith and Harvey, and it is hereby enacted,—That the Township Clerk shall prepare lists of the persons liable to perform Statute Labor on the roads in the division in which such person resides, and if he shall neglect or refuse to perform the same after having been duly notified, he shall be liable to a fine of 10s. with costs, or imprisonment in the County Jail, if no distress found; and effectual such fine and costs can be levied against such delinquent by distress and sale of his goods and chattels, and rendering the over, under such distress are never paid.

7. And be it enacted,—That if through inadvertency the name of any person shall be omitted in the Assessment Roll, such person shall nevertheless be liable to perform Statute Labor as if no such omission had taken place, as also any person who may have come into the said Township, after the Assessment Roll has been taken for the year;

8. And be it enacted,—That the Overseer be not prevented from his labor by reason of his having that office, but any day he superintends the labor of others shall count for a day's work, and he may also be allowed one day's work for applying to the Township Clerk for his list.

9. And be it enacted,—That it shall be the duty of each and every Overseer of Highways in the said Township to accept of and receive in the manner hereinbefore mentioned, any commutation money tendered to him in lieu of Statute Labor by any person liable to perform the same in his division and expend the same in making and repairing the roads and bridges within such division.

10. And be it enacted,—That each Overseer shall, and hereby is required to, from time to time before the first day of July in each year, call out the inhabitants of his division, and cause the same to be worked at the highways, roads and bridges in the division over which he has been appointed.

To apply to the Township Clerk up on or before the 10th day of May for a list of the persons liable to perform Statute Labor, and the number of day's labor each person is liable to perform.

To notify every such person either verbally or in writing, personally, or to some grown person at his place of residence, the day, hour, and place where he requires him to work, giving at least three clear days notice.

To call out in like manner any person of the age of 21 years and upwards, and under 60 years of age, residing in his division although such persons name be not on the Assessors Roll or on the Township Clerk's list.

To add to the list the name of any person to him known who shall have been omitted through inadvertency on the Assessors Roll and also the names of such persons as shall come to reside in his division after the Assessors Roll has been taken, and shall call such persons out to perform Statute Labor.

To apply to writing all non-residents owning property in his division, stating the time when he will commence the performance of Statute Labor and the amount of commutation money required in lieu thereof.

To call forth persons and superintend statute labor compelled to do any dispute in his division, and to reject the services of any insufficient person and to work as a substitute for another, and to dismiss or discharge any person neglecting or refusing to work faithfully according to his best ability.

To cause ruts or fences to be erected at dangerous places of the Road by the labor under his direction.

To remove any sudden obstruction and repair any damage which may occur to any Road, Bridge or Highway in his Division, and the owner, occupier or any agent any money in his possession applicable to the Road, at any other time than between the 10th day of May and the 24th day of July.

To make complaint to the Reeve or some Justice of the Peace having competent jurisdiction, if any person liable to perform Statute Labor, and duly warned, shall fail to perform his Statute Labor, or if any person shall pull down or destroy any fence or railing erected along any Bridge or precipice, for the safety of Travellers, or any gutter or finger post, such person on offending, shall forfeit and pay, on conviction, for every such offence, a sum not less than Five Shillings nor more than Five Pounds, to be recovered as hereinafter provided.

13. And be it enacted,—That any Overseer of Highways neglecting his duty or part of his duty, or any other person or persons contravening any of the provisions or requirements of this By-Law, if not hereinbefore provided for, shall forfeit and pay on conviction, a penalty of not less than Five Shillings nor more than Five Pounds.

14. And be it enacted,—That all penalties imposed under the provisions of this By-Law, may, on conviction, before the Reeve, or any other Justice of the Peace, having competent jurisdiction, be recovered with costs, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender, and in case there be no distress found, out of which the penalty can be levied, such offender to be committed to the Common Jail of the County for any period not exceeding twenty-one days, (except in the case provided for in the Sixth Section of this By-law,)

15. And be it enacted,—That By-Law No. 107 of this Council, and passed on the 29th day of August, 1854, be and the same is hereby repealed.

(Signed) M. S. DEAN, Reeve.
CHRIS. BURTON, Township Clerk.

$100 A YEAR,

And upwards saved to the Farmer, by Aldus Mowry's

CHOP GRINDER.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose now in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 15 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are fixed into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and ground at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without altering or adjusting the Machine.

PRICE $60.

All orders directed to "M. Mowry, Ashburnham, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.

which is realized in this country.

The increase of business in England is unprecedented, as shown by the Parliamentary returns, and the following taken from the late Sunderland Report:

It will thus be seen that the total amount of business done during the last nine months of the Company's operations has been TWENTY-TWO THOUSAND NINE HUNDRED AND ONE POUNDS, producing an additional annual income of Representing Property Insured in the outside Village Stations Stations!

$4,600,000

The Report further says, that "the Directors congratulate the shareholders on this satisfactory increase in the business of the Company, and they have every reason to believe that from the connection now formed it will continue to increase in the same ratio.

The Capital of the Company is devoted entirely to Fire Insurance, having no relation for a Life Insurance.

All losses in Canada are submitted to the Board of Directors in Toronto, and are paid there, the certificates, and if found satisfactory, at once after the payment of the claim. This system has called forth numerous words of thanks.

If differences should arise between claimants and the Company, the Manager is duly empowered to settle the same in Toronto.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE, AND BRITISH REVIEWS.

L. SCOTT & CO., NEW YORK, continues to publish the following leading British periodicals, viz:

THE LONDON QUARTERLY (Conservative)
2.
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
3.
NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
4.
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Liberal.)
5.
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE, (Tory.)

These periodicals ably represent the three great political parties of Great Britain—Whig, Tory and Radical—but politics forms but only one feature of their character. As Organs of the most profound writers on Science, Literature, Morality and Religion, they stand, as they have ever stood, unrivalled in the world of letters, being considered indispensable to the scholar and the professional man, while to the intelligent scholar of every class they furnish a more correct and satisfactory record of the current literature of the day, throughout the world, than can be possibly obtained from any other source.

Early Copies.

The receipt of advance sheets from the British publishers gives additional value to these Reprints, inasmuch as they can now be placed in the hands of subscribers about as soon as the original editions.

CHRIST AND HIS APOSTLES.

THE CHEAPEST and most elegant engraving ever published. Dayton & Co.' Magnificent engraving of Thorwalden's Sacrestatues in the Cathedral at Copenhagen, representing

Christ and His Apostles!

Has been issued but a few weeks, and orders for it are pouring in by every mail. Although the original models sent to this country in 1852, and exhibited at the Chrystal Palace, were destroyed in that building, the SACRED GROUP, depicted in bold relief in a

Splendid Engraving,

Thirty-two inches in length and twenty-four inches in width, copied by permission of the Danish Government from the Copenhagen Statues, still survives, and five scenes of Gospel History are portrayed in the architectural border surrounding the main picture, viz:

John Preaching in the Wilderness.—Jesus Baptized by John—Christ blessing Little Children.— The last Supper—The Three Mary's at the Sepulchre.

Altogether this is the greatest triumph of art ever witnessed in this country. The Rev. Dr. Prime, editor of the New York Observer, the editors of the New York Evangelist, Christian Advocate, Examiner, Herald of Truth, Chronicle, etc., speak in enraptured terms of the work, and recommend its introduction into every family in the land.

The proof sheets were sold for $35 each, but with the view of affording every family an opportunity to possess this enchanting and instructive picture, the proprietors offer it and an elegant Bible, bound in Velvet, with gilt-edged leaves and rich clasps and mountings, for $3.25; the 25 cents being for return postage.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARIES Free of Cost!

Sabbath School Libraries and Sabbath School children can produce this GREAT GOSPEL PICTURE upon such terms as will give their school a Library free of Cost. The picture is in large demand among the members of all Christian Churches. Hundreds of Christian parents anxious to encourage their Children in well-doing, and to obtain (for the nominal sum of One Dollar) some of the most sublime engravings of modern sculptures, warmly approve of our scheme, and we confidently expect in supplying the religious public with this unequalled scriptural engraving, to be the means of founding a large number of Sunday School Libraries, and of thus conserving in two ways the cause of Gospel truth and sacred culture.

SABBATH SCHOOL CLUBS can be formed embracing from 25 copies upward, at our regular prices of 25 each copy, and we will forward with the engravings a Library (from the American S. S. Union or any other source) of Two Books for every subscribed. Thus, an order for 50 copies, which would be easily raised in most schools would secure 100 Books, and 100 Engravings would secure 200 Books, and so on.

New York, May 8, 1860.

The beautifully engraved copy of Thorwaldsen's "Christ and His Apostles" is well fitted to adorn the walls of any Christian dwelling or Sabbath School Room, and will suggest valuable, edifying lessons to both young and old.

Rt. Thomp, General Agent of the Royal Canadian Sabbath School Union.

J. H. Bowes, Associate Secretary of the American Sabbath School Union.

ERASMUS wanted everywhere. $1.25 will secure a letter of agency, stating special terms, with one copy of the engraving. Address,

FISHER'S HOTEL.

AMOS J. FISHER

BEGS to acquaint the inhabitants of Peterborough, Town and County, that he has recently opened a Hotel on Hunter street, adjoining the stand of the

OLD "FISHER'S HOTEL,"

where he is prepared to attend to those who may favor him with their patronage. The building has at a great expense been fitted up for

A FIRST-CLASS HOUSE

and every attention will be paid to the wants of the resident and transient public. There are on the premises good sheds and a commodious stable, open daily, and free of charge. There will be a careful Hostler in attendance, and parties may rely upon it that the best attention will be paid to horses and conveyances entrusted to his charge, and no fee required. A limited number of may find comfortable accomodations. The Bar will be furnished with the choicest Wines and Spiritous and Malt Liquors.

The Farming Community are particularly requested to give him a call.

Remember the place—Fisher's Old Stand.

PHONOGRAPHY, or WRITING BY SOUND!!

PHONOGRAPHY was invented by ISAAC PITMAN, of Bath, England, in the year 1837. It is the most simple, most natural, most rapid, and most easily learned system of writing which has ever been, or ever can be invented.

During the past fifteen years, hundreds of thousands of persons, in England and America, in both public and private life, have learned to write Phonography, and thousands of social and business letters annually pass through the post office.

Nor is the great popularity to be wondered at. The present system of writing is exceedingly cumbersome, and totally unworthy these days of progress and invention. Phonography is equally as legible, can be learned in one twentieth the time, and can be written six times as fast! In other words, the labor of six days can be performed in one—one man can do the work of six! So simple is the system, too, that a person may learn to write it slowly, in a couple of hours. An hour's daily practice for a few weeks will enable any person to write Phonography with certainty, and with some degree of freedom. The same amount of practice continued for six months will enable a person to take reports of speeches lectures, sermons, or conversation, and to read them with accuracy.

The late Hon. Thos. H. Benton, upon being presented with a verbatim report of one of his masterly speeches, taken by a Boy only twelve years of age, said: "Had this art been known 40 years ago it would have saved me 20 years hard labor." The learned senator spoke but a portion of the truth. What long-hand requires six years to accomplish, Phonography will perform in one.

To clergymen, Editors, Physicians, Lawyers, Secretaries, Conveyancers, Law and Medical Students, Lecturers, Printers, School Teachers, Merchants, School Boys and Girls, a knowledge of Phonography is of vast utility. In fact there is no profession or calling in which it is not useful, and no young man's education can be considered complete without it.

During the past 23 months hundreds of persons in Canada, of every pursuit in life, have acquired the Art, from many of whom the subscriber has received neatly-written phonographic letters, expressive of their delight with the attainment, and the extraordinary ease with which they have acquired it.

For the purpose of aiding in the dissemination of so important a reform in his own country, the subscriber is now prepared to supply all who apply, with the MANUAL OF PHONOGRAPHY, and the PHONOGRAPHIC COPY BOOK, sent by mail to any part of the Province, postage pre-paid, for the small sum of TWO DOLLAR.

Anybody and everybody, who can learn anything, can learn PHONOGRAPHY from the MANUAL without other assistance. Those who wish to be able to put their thoughts to paper at the rate of from 150 to 250 words per minute, should send for the above-mentioned works at once. The instruction given by the Manual is as plain as A. B. C., and ten times as easy to understand.

AFFLICTED READ!

EUROPEAN MEDICAL HOUSE AND
Botanic Dispensary
No. 51, King St. West, Toronto, C. W
ESTABLISHED BY
DR. GOODING, FORMERLY OF ENGLAND.

A NEW, SPEEDY, and most successful mode of treating Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Nervous debility, Affections of the Kidneys, Consumption, Bronchitis and all cases, Diseases of the Blood, Skin and Bladder, Rheumatism, Scrofula, Fever Sores, Mercurial Chronic Complaints, &c., &c.

☞ No charge for advice.

Dr Gooding is now engaged in treating this class of diseases, which, from long experience, he has found to be of a most satisfactory character. The treatment adopted by him is new, it is based upon entire new principles, totally over-powered remedies, without minerals of poisons. The fortunate of cases are such that patients can be cured at their own homes without exposure, in any part of the country, from an accurate description of their case, by letter, and have the medicines sent them by mail or express.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Young men who are troubled with weakness generally caused by a bad habit in youth, the effects of which are dizziness, pains, weak eyes, weakness of the back and loins, nervousness, indistinct ideas, loss of memory, with unfitness for study, may be cured by the New Remedy prescribed.

COUNTRY PATIENTS.

Medicines with full directions sent to any part of the United States or Canada, by patients only stating their symptoms by letter. Business correspondence strictly attended.

Ayer's Ague cure.

SURVIVE OR PERISH.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

The history of this great remedy is the most remarkable medical revelation that the world has ever known. It is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experience of one nation, but consists of a compilation of testimonials from the sick of every country—a record, the like of which has never been collected in favour of any discovery or invention since time began.

BILIOUS DISORDERS.

In whatever form disease attacks the liver, it is repelled and exterminated by the nourishing, painless and irresistible curative.

Let the sick whom the faculty have abandoned resort with confidence to this antibilious agent, and a restoration to health and activity will be the unerring result.

DYSPEPSIA.

The great scourge of this continent yields quickly to a course of these antiseptic Pills and the digestive organs are restored to their proper tone; no matter in what hideous shape this hydra of disease exhibits itself, this nourishing and unerring remedy disperses it from the patient's system.

GENERAL DEBILITY AND WEAKNESS.

From whatever cause, LOSSES or EXCESS, and all other signs of a diseased liver, and other disorganization of the system, vanish under the ameliorating influence of this all powerful antiseptic and detergent remedy.

SICKLY FEMALES

Should lose no time in trying a few doses of this regulating and renovating remedy; whatever may be their complaint, it can be taken with safety in all periods and other disorganizations; its effect is all but miraculous.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy known for the cure of the following diseases:

Asthma,	Headaches,
Bowel Complaints,	Indigestion,
Colics,	Jaundice,
Coughs,	Inflammation,
Chest Diseases,	Inward Weakness
Constipation,	Liver Complaints,
Dropsies,	Lowness of Spirits,
Diarrhœa,	Piles,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Debility,	Secondary Symptoms,
Fever and Ague,	Venereal Affections,
Female Complaints,	Worms of all kinds.

☞ CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicine or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

☞ Sold at the Manufactory of Professor Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in boxes at 25 cents, 62 cents and $1 each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each box.

PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE,
BETTER THAN
EXPERIMENTAL SCIENCE.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.

CONSOLATION FOR THE SUFFERING.

Nearly fifty years continual use in every part of the habitable globe, amongst the savage and the civilized alike, has proved that simple ointment, open sores, hard tumors, scrofulous decomposants of all kinds, abscesses, cancers, old wounds, and, in one word, every species of inflammation and suppuration, whether in the skin, the flesh, the glands, or among the muscles, can be arrested and permanently cured, without danger, by rubbing in and using as a dressing, this inestimable Ointment.

SCROFULA, ERYSIPLAS, AND SALT RHEUM, ULCERATIONS OF THE SKIN, PILES, AND FISTULA,

No remedy has ever done so much for the cure of diseases of the Skin, whatever form they may assume, as this Ointment. No case of Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore Heads, Scrofula or Erysipelas, can long withstand its influence.

BAD LEGS, OLD SORES, ULCERS, &c.

Cases of many years standing that have pertinaciously refused to yield to any other remedy or treatment, have invariably succumbed to a few applications of this powerful ungent.

Arising from a bad state of the blood or simple disease, are eradicated, and a clear as a transparent surface regained by the restorative action of this Ointment. It surpasses many of the cosmetics and other toilet appliances in its power to dispel rashes and other disfigurements of the face.

Every form and feature of these prevalent and agonizing disorders, is eradicated locally and entirely by the use of this emollient; warm fomentations should precede its application. Its healthy qualities will be found to be thorough and invariable.

Both the Ointment and Pills will be used in the following cases:

Bunions,	Skin Diseases,
Burns,	Swelled Glands,
Chapped Hands,	Sore Legs,
Chilblains,	Sore Breasts,
Fistula,	Sore Heads
Gout,	Sore Throats,
Lumbago,	Sores of all kinds,
Mercurial Eruptions,	Sprains,
Piles,	Stiff Joints,
Rheumatism,	Tetter,
Ringworm,	Ulcers,
Salt Rheum,	Venereal Sores,
Scalds,	Wounds of all kinds.

☞ CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London" are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicine or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

☞ Sold at the Manufactory of Professor Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in pots at 25 cents, 62 cents, and $1 each.

☞ There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each pot.

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.

L. W. DECKER, Proprietor.

IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION, to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

Selected Poetry.

A CHEER FOR GARIBALDI.

Honor to Garibaldi! Win or lose,
A Hero to all time that Chief goes down.
Whatever loose his emprise ensues.
He, certain of unquenchable renown,
Fights for a victor's or martyr's crown,
Another side than Cato's Heaven may please:
Forbid it, Heaven! but still the devotees
Of priestly tyranny shall never drown
His name in his true blood; their howling hails
May gore his noble bosom; but he falls
The Champion of United Italy
Against brute force with mockery allied.
Staunch wrestler, as a man, for Liberty,
'Twill be on record how he fought and died.

THE BABY.

Another little wave
Upon the sea of life;
Another soul to save,
Amid its toil and strife.

Two more little feet
To walk the dusty road:
To choose where two paths meet,
The narrow or the broad.

Two more little hands
To work for good or ill;
Two more little eyes,
Another little will.

Another heart to love,
Receiving love again;
And so the baby came,
A thing of joy and pain.

A TALE FOR DISCONSOLATE BACHELORS.

"The last call now except on Timothy," I said to myself, and I pulled a bell in London street, and began to square my necktie till the servant should open the door. I was setting out to Simla, on a twelvemonths' visit to my brother, and was finishing a round of farewell calls. The servant welcomed me with a smile, and ushered me at once into the back parlor where Aunt Mills and my pretty cousins were gathered round the fire. No a place was made for me, and I drew in, and we all chatted about the one absorbing subject.

"Poor laddie!" said Aunt Mills, "and you are really going away to India?"

"No doubt of that, aunt. But never mind: I shall soon be back."

"I hope you may, Dick; and I hope and trust you may," said Aunt Mills, shaking her head with a dismal and foreboding expression; "I have known a great many go out to India who never come back again.—You must take great care of yourself. The tigers are very dangerous; rattlesnakes too,—they swarm in the beds, I'm told." I promised to be on my guard against intruders; and Aunt proceeded to detail several encouraging cases of persons who had been pounced upon by hungry tigers and torn in small pieces. She specified, however, the case of a lady who had frightened a Royal Bengal Tiger by hoisting an umbrella in its face,—an expedient to which she strongly urged me to resort in like circumstances.—I promised to make a note of it, and in the meantime got my cousins to sit down to the piano. They sang "Home, sweet home," and "Will ye no come back again?" and other appropriate airs very sweetly—especially Kate, who sings like a nightingale, if you know what like that is, which I don't. But she sings sweetly at all events; with such expression, too, as if her whole soul were in it. There was no light except the ruddy glow of the fire; but when it fell upon her shining curls and exquisitely chiselled features as she sat warbling there, I thought I had never seen such a lovely girl before. Now, readers, don't fancy I'm going to fall in love with Kate; not a bit of it. I loved her, and I loved her sisters, just as I love my own; nothing more. But I tell you as she sat warbling there, I thought an angel could scarcely look more lovely.

They wished me to spend the evening with them, but I could not,—I had promised to take tea with my old schoolmate, Timothy Pottledot. So I rose to go. I proposed a parting kiss all round, and Aunt Mills, of course, submitted with matronly dignity.—The young ladies, on the contrary, were instantly in a flutter of consternation, and it was only after a violent struggle with each that I succeeded. As for Kate, when her turn came, she darted out of the room and up-stairs. I pursued madly, four steps at the time. There was a good deal of darting to and fro out of one room into another, but at last we both tumbled promiscuously into a corner, and I got one of the most delicious kisses I ever had before or have had since. The point being gained, Kate came down stairs with me quite submissively; and then Aunt Mills and the whole bevy of cousins gathered in the vestibule to see me away. After a few words of mutual encouragement, and a final warning from Aunt Mills respecting the tigers, I sallied out on the way to Timothy Pottledot's. It was a raw, gusty night, and I was glad enough when I turned into the passage leading to Tim's lodging. I was a dark passage, and I had to grope my way along till I reached the foot of the stairs. I felt my way up a prodigious length of stairs very cautiously for I was in momentary dread of finding myself launched down into some unseen abyss. I had gone up what appeared to my excited imagination about a mile and a half of stairs when I reached the top landing and succeeded in finding the door. I felt for a knocker or a bell-handle, but in vain, so I used my knuckles. I knocked for some time without effect, but at last the door was opened by a woman whose form was dimly visible in the light of an oil lamp in a remote kitchen. "Is it the milk?" said the woman, in a half whisper. I informed her that I was not the milk, but a friend of Mr Pottledot's; "is he in?" She said he was, and when I had stepped in she shut the door behind me, and, after knocking at another, on the opposite side of the little entrance, opened it and announced me. Timothy was sitting at supper, reading by the illumination of a tallow candle, which was stuck into a lighthouse upon the table of "Hogg." He gave and wrung my hand affectionately, but the poor fellow was clearly in very low spirits. I did not wonder at it; the place was too dismal for anything. It was a small room, and the wind was howling about, and the window rattled loosely in its frame. A few black cinders were carefully gathered into the centre of a grate, from the middle of which arose a slender thread of smoke and wandered disconsolately up into the chimney.

"Sit down," said Tim, placing a chair for me close to the fender, "you look cold."

I should imagine that I did, for I felt like an icicle; so to please Tim I held up my feet towards the grate, though I might as well have held them out at the window.

"It is'nt a very good fire," said Tim, taking up the poker, and looking dismally at the cinders; "I don't know what's wrong with it. It seems in a perpetual state either of death or resurrection."

It was clearly in a state of death at that particular moment, and held out very little prospect of a speedy resurrection; although Tim (who fortunately did not use the poker, or he would inevitable have extinguished it) knelt down and blew at the cinders till they were colder and blacker than ever.

"Never mind," said Tim, rising, "we'll have tea, that will be better." The bell was not in working order, so he went himself to order Mrs. Blobbs to bring in the tea. Mrs. Blobbs took so very long to execute this order that I just began to think that she had no intention of executing it at all, when she appeared with a small tray furnished with a teapot, a plate of salt butter, two slices of underdone toast, and four farthing biscuits, which Mrs. Blobbs had evidently been instructed to provide for the occasion. The tea turned out to be lukewarm, and Tim had to go in quest of Mrs. Blobbs for the teaspoons and cream. He returned with a couple of pewter teaspoons, but nothing in the shape of cream was to be had—the milk boy having neglected to bring any, and Mrs. Blobbs having nobody in the house to send for it. So we sat down and drank the lukewarm tea, which bore in taste and colour a remarkable resemblance to an infusion of senna. Tim had evidently intended to give me a comfortable tea, so he was sadly dispirited; though I drank the torpid compound and chewed the underdone toast with as great an appearance of relish as I could possibly assume.

"By the way," said Tim, brightening up, "do you like marmalade?"

I assured him there was nothing in the way of preserves that I relished nearly so much.

"I got a pot through from the old folks at home the other day," said Tim, opening a sort of bunker that was under the window, "the best I ever tasted, without exception. They said it was the nicest they had ever succeeded in making at home, and so they sent me through this pot to taste it. Now take plenty of it, Dick; it's for one." Tim laid down the pot beside me and returned to close the bunker. I uncovered the pot and put in my teaspoon to take out some, but thought Tim's exhortation rather superfluous, as there was little more left than served to cover the bottom. I scraped out a small quantity, and tapped it upon the edge of my plate.

"Oh, come, come, Dick!" said Tim, "that's nothing. Allow me." He took up the spoon, but had no sooner glanced into the pot than his face contracted into an expression of extreme indignation and disappointment.

"Hang that woman!" he cried, striking the pot upon the table. "It was half-full yesterday, and I haven't touched it since. This is too bad. O hang it! this is intolerable!" Tim had bounced to the door and opened it. "It's no use," he said, slamming it to again; "it would just make her worse in other things. Confound her!—the old hag, that she is."

"That woman," he continued, glancing in the direction, I suppose of the unconscious Mrs Blobbs—"that woman has no more honesty about her than a—than a jackal. She charges me with mustard though I never use it. She steals my tea and sugar. She drinks my beer at the rate of two bottles to my one. Hang it. I won't stand it. I—by what I shall do." Tim glanced at the door to assure himself that it was shut, and, after listening for a moment, bent towards me and continued in a suppressed tone, "I shall buy a sixpenny pot of jam and put some croton oil into it. If that doesn't cure her, my name's not Pottledot." A malignant smile overspread Tim's face as he slowly recovered his position and proceeded to eat a farthing biscuit.

"How is your literary work getting on?" I asked, when we had finished tea. Tim, I should have told you, is a literary character.

"Not well at all," replied Tim despondingly; "in fact, this morning I got a most disheartening letter—a perfect crusher."—He pulled a handful of letters out of his coat pocket, and handed me one of them. It ran thus:—

"Mr. Timothy Pottledot,

"Dear Sir,—I am sorry to say I cannot undertake in future to pay for your contributions. They have for some time been falling far below the mark. It is not criticism that you require; it is commonsense alone, often in language so full of repugnance and continuously as to be unfit for our columns. We hope you will see it to be your duty, I can assure you it would be for your interest, to cultivate a less offensive style. I shall be glad to look over any contributions you may be pleased to make, but for the present I cannot undertake either to accept or pay for them.

"Yours, &c.,

"PARAGRAPH CONDENSE."

"That is very unfortunate." I said.—"Have you any of the reviews to which he refers?" Tim reached across the table and handed me a dingy scrap-book in which were pasted leaves of journals and reviews. I proceeded to glance over some of them, while Tim knelt down close to the fender, and endeavored to excite the fire to more cordial by pasting the bellows on its every face between the mantelpiece and the grate. The reviews were evidently written by a disappointed aspirant to literary fame. They were unanimous in their condemnation of Tim's productions, and bitter in their sarcasm. Tim, I must say, was a very poor hand at a review, and I could not wonder at his correspondent, Mr. Paragraph Condense, not wishing to have his columns defiled by such stuff as Tim's. We ended the evening in the drinking of his health in a glass of cold water, and I left him to his solitude and his despondency.

I reached Simla in the early part of 1857. In May the mutiny broke out, and so disturbed the postal arrangements that I only got one letter from England all the time I was at Simla. In the autumn of the year following I returned, and, having nothing to detain me at Southampton or London, came on without delay to Edinburg. It was evening when I arrived, and I stepped down to the Philosophical Institution in hopes of meeting some acquaintances; I picked up the Mercury in the news room, and glanced over the local news. The following paragraph caught my eye at once:—

"Presentation to Mr. Timothy Pottledot.—We understand that the presentation to the talented and philanthropic editor of the Northern Review is to be made to-night in the Queen Street Hall,—Jacob Wumble, M. P., in the chair. In addition to the handsome epergne to be presented to Mr. Pottledot we are happy to learn that a silver tea-set will be presented to his lady."

"Strange coincidence of names," I said to myself; I didn't think there was two Timothy Pottledots in Scotland. If it hadn't been for the Mrs. Pottledot I should positively have fancied it was Tim. It surely can't be his father." Queen Street Hall is next door to the Philosophical, and the meeting (as I found by referring to my watch) must be going on. I stept round, and though the hall was quite full, a half crown induced the door-keeper to let me in. The hall was brilliantly lighted and filled with a brilliant company, but so crowded that there was scarcely standing-room, and all I could see was the head of a little gentleman, who was speaking on the platform. He had a prodigious development of whiskers, this little gentleman had, and his face was very red and covered with perspiration, as if he had been speaking for a considerable time. His gestures were very animated, especially with his right arm, which he waved gladiatorially in the air as if he were cracking a coachman's whip. He was saying that if any man more than another deserved a pledge of public confidence it was Mr. Timothy Pottledot; and if there was any present more capable than another it was no apparent. "A Bill," he said, brandishing what I saw was a silver lily. The lily grew, as has Mr. Pottledot, grown in power, grown in usefulness, grown in public estimation. The lily is of silver, gold and [illegible] and is not Mr. Pottledot of sterling worth? [illegible] and through? The lily is a symbol of [illegible] Mr. Pottledot. The lily is presented to Mr. Pottledot. The lily is presented to Mr. Pottledot. [illegible] Mr. Pottledot [illegible] Here we see the fruit of [illegible] in our new triumph, in our [illegible] in the prospered success of [illegible] Pottledot. Sir, [illegible] Pottledot [illegible] Northern Review [illegible]

[illegible] the publishers is prefixing to this volume a portrait of Mr. Bert. It is a guarantee that he really belongs to the genus homo. The low and rampant animalism of his book would inevitably have led us to a different conclusion."

There was another beginning with—"Johnson said that Robertson's writing resembled a little gold packed in a great deal of wool. Mr. Fergusson's writing bears considerable resemblance to Mr. Robertsons; the only difference is that Mr. Fergusson's is all wool together."

A third commenced thus—

"If extremes meet, the poetry of Mr. Smile is close upon that of Shakespere, for it is unquestionably the most wretched drivelling that we ever happen to have read.

I knew it was not Tim's nature to write thus; but his spirit had been embittered by disappointment and neglect. I looked at the poor fellow as he crept by the cheerless hearth, his thin, sickly face blue with the cold, and when I thought of his utter loneliness and misery I felt no emotion but that of pity. I could not in honesty tell him that Mr. Codgers was mistaken. I rather urged him to take that gentleman's advise, and cultivate a healthier style. Some conversation about my future plans brought us to the hour when I must go. Tim bade me good bye reluctantly and with evident pain, for I could see a tear glittering in his eye, and he wrung my hand as if we were parting for evermore.

"Well, good-bye," I said, as I left him; "keep up your spirits, there are better days in store for you. I had scarcely got out and begun my descent of the dark stairs when I found that I had left my gloves behind. I groped my way back, and finding the door open, crept across the passage and into Tim's room. Tim was sitting by the hearth, his head bent upon his knees, and his frame convulsed by emotion.

"I say Tim, what's this?"

Tim started, and hastily brushing his eyes with the cuff of his coat, pretended to be busy with the fire.

"What's all this, Tim?"

Tim rose, and seeing there was no use trying to hide his feelings, turned and took my hand. His eyes were already swollen and his cheek wet with tears.

"Dick," he said, "don't think me childish; you are the only friend I have left; and when I found you too gone, it was too much for me."

"My dear Tim," I said, "I feel as if I could throw up the whole thing just to wait near you. But I'll do better. Give me a pen."

I sat down and addressed a note of introduction to Aunt Mills, telling her in a few words of Tim's loneliness and asking her for my sake, to show him all the kindness in her power.

"Call with this," I said sealing the note "and call as soon as you can. You must take my place at Aunt Mills, and she will take mine with you. Now, you'll be sure to call?"

"I will," said Tim; "she'll soon tire of me like all the others; but for your sake I'll call."

Tim took the tallow candle, and, when he had snuffed it with a pen-holder and a paper knife, showed me down stairs. On reaching the foot a wild gust of wind blew the candle out. We shook hands warmly in the dark.

"Good-bye, Dick; a prosperous voyage to you."

"Thanks, Tim; God bless you; good-bye."

I reached Simla in the early part of 1857. In May the mutiny broke out, and so disturbed the postal arrangements that I only got one letter from England all the time I was at Simla. THE SICILIAN INSURRECTION

GARIBALDI'S SUCCESS.

From the London Times, June 1

For some days we have been obliged to look upon the result of the Sicilian insurrection as doubtful. The confident despatches claiming victory after victory, which were issued by the Neapolitan Government, together with the absence of any definite news from Garibaldi himself, gave some ground for alarm. Happily these fears are dissipated by the intelligence which we are able to publish to-day. Garibaldi entered Palermo on the 27th. The capital of Sicily is in his hands. In spite of every deficiency the brave commanded by the heroic Italian drove the troops from their positions. Henceforth Garibaldi has all the moral and material strength derived from the possession of the chief place in the island. Timely supplies of men and materials will be the fruits of victory. Its moral effects will be the discouragement of the army, and perhaps a large desertion to the ranks of the patriots. The whole interior of the country, together with its most important city, have now been wrested from the Royal authority. From one end to the other the island has been cleared of the Royal troops. It is now evident that the encounter at Calata Fimi was a victory for Garibaldi. Instead of the troops attacking him, it is probable that he drove them from their positions, and then hurried them on before him to Palermo. The troops have been driven out from their lines before the town, and probably only command the spot on which they are encamped. Far different is the position of the national party. From the beginning it seems that the Sicilians have had confidence in their leader, for they have joined him in crowds, quitting the towns held by the Neapolitan garrisons, and coming to swell the adventurous bands of Garibaldi in the open country. We may therefore now consider that he has achieved almost certain success. He has the country at his back, and can obtain supplies of all kinds from the interior; he can communicate with his adherents in any part of the island, while the Royal garrisons are all divided from each other, and intelligence can only pass between them by sea. Now that Palermo is taken, the fate of those other garrisons are sealed. They must fall one by one, some being strong enough to resist such a force as Garibaldi has at command without assistance from his neighbors.

The conduct of the Neapolitan naval officers is worthy of the men who allowed two merchant steamers to land some fifteen hundred enemies under fire of their guns in broad day. Their barbarity to the unfortunate city of Palermo equals their stupidity and sluggishness at Marsala. The Neapolitan squadron bombarded Palermo for several hours, and this before the insurgents had penetrated into the town. Doubtless the authorities well knew the feeling with which they are regarded, and are perhaps not far wrong in fancying that every Sicilian is a rebel. What damage has been done to the capital we have yet to learn, but it is to be hoped that the squadron succeeded no better in destroying innocent men's houses at Palermo than in stopping the transports of the conspirators a fortnight before.

Whatever be the course of events, it is now pretty plain that the Royal authority is overthrown in Sicily. The insurrection is as good as victorious when the whole people have risen against the Government, when the Royal troops dare not stir out of their lines, and may be starved, except for what is brought them by sea. Happy are we to welcome the island once more into rank of free communities. Terrible have been the sufferings of the unfortunate people; great has been their patience, noble their attachment to their reverend dynasty, until every human right was violated, and the spectacle of daily increasing cruelty drove them to resistance. No tyrant of ancient days ever perpetrate greater crimes than have been permitted and encouraged by the Government of the last two Kings; no agent of cruelty deserved a more exemplary punishment than the Ministers of Police, who have refined on all the tortures of the Inquisition. At last the retribution has come, and France II. will expiate by the loss of a valuable province his father's crimes and his own.

A time may shortly come when we shall be called upon to consider who shall administer the Government of Sicily. But we hope that the whole kingdom will shortly throw off the yoke of the present Sovereign. In such a case it will be the business of statesmen to consider the best means of settling the [illegible]. There are three candidates [illegible] to occupy the whole [illegible] to Garibaldi, a scheme likely to find favour only with the partisans of Italian nationality. Englishmen would probably have no objection to it, but it remains to be seen how it would be received by the Sovereign who fancied his own dominions throughout by the excessive magnitude of the present Sardinian State. The second is the Murattist restoration, of which the less said the better. The third is the elevation of some more mean member of the Bourbon family to the throne. The prince of Syracuse, brother to the late, and uncle to the present King, is a man of sense, a good Constitutionalist, and one who has always protested against the tyrannical proceedings of his brother and of his nephew. He seems to be in Naples [illegible] Philippe was to Charles X. [illegible] and, if the analogy in character [illegible] as that of relative position, the distracted kingdom might do worse than raise him to the throne in the place of the bigot who now reigns.

A CRY FOR HELP.

Garibaldi defeated the Neapolitan troops at Calata Fimi, on the 15th May. The actions was celebrated as a victory in Naples, but the following delightful despatch from the General of the Royal troops to the Commander in Chief, tells a different story:—

"(Most urgent.)

"CALATA FIMI, May 15.

"Excellency,—Help—prompt help! The armed bands which left Salemi this morning have covered all the hills to the south and south-west of Calata Fimi. One-half of my column advanced within range and attacked the rebels, who poured out in thousand from every point. The firing was well sustained, but success of Sicilians united with the Italian bands are in immense numbers. We have killed the great commander of the Italian Free Bands and have taken their flag which we have with us. Unfortunately a piece of artillery fell from the block of a rude wheelwright shed, and remained in the hands of the rebels; this [illegible] my soul with grief. My column [illegible] retreat [illegible] I am on the [illegible] numerous and obstinately bent on fighting. I fear to be assailed in the position which I occupy. I will defend myself as long as possible, but if most prompt assistance be not sent I must confess I do not know where the affair will end. The ammunition of the artillery is almost finished; that of the infantry considerably diminished. I have 62 wounded. I cannot at this moment give an exact number of dead, as I am writing immediately after the retreat. I submit to your Excellency that if circumstances compel me I shall retreat on Alcamo. My column is surrounded by enemies who have occupied the mills and taken the flour prepared for the troops. The column fought with brisk firing, from 10 a. m., until 5 p. m., when I made my retreat.

EARTHQUAKES IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Repeated earthquake shocks of the most violent character have been experienced at Callao and in various other parts of Peru. Early in the morning of the 19th of April one shock lasted 80 seconds. This was said to have been the heaviest shock that had been experienced since the submerging of old Callao, and the general opinion was that Lima and Callao could not stand a much heavier shaking. However on the following Sunday, at half-past 1 p. m., the ground commenced to shake in good earnest, but lasted only 15 seconds, doing in that short space of time the estimated damage, in Lima, of $1,000,000 in Callao about $20,000 and in Chorillos about $10,000; and destroying several estates in Canete, which were set down at 200,000. There was not a dwelling in Callao, Lima or Chorillos, that had not suffered damage,—walls cracked, rocks fallen in, people wounded, and churches left in such a condition that steeples would have to be torn down. In Manta trees were rooted out of the ground, and one of the mountains close by was rent in two and produced a volcano of hot fetid water. The earthquake then took a northern course, the worst effect was in Cante; the greatest state of alarm existed. All the public squares were occupied by families who preferred the open air to their insecure homes. A letter from Callao dated the 27th April says:—

"Up to the present time slight shocks continue to be felt; I have counted 28, but there have been many more. On Monday, in Callao, an alarm was raised that the sea was receding from the shore and presenting the same phenomenon as in 1849 during and preceding the sinking of old Callao.—People were to be seen running about greatly distracted and a general panic prevailed. All the roads leading out of Callao were lined with affrighted sinners, fleeing from the wrath to come. Special trains were running all day, carrying away hundreds to Lima, while the most devoted or fanatic went to Bella Vista, and took from the church the image of the Senor del Mar, the same that was used in 1749. A procession was formed, accompanied by a band of music and a guard of honour, and the image that was to calm the sea, and bring it back to a proper sense of its duty, was carried down to the mole with all the pomp and ceremony the Church could afford. After remaining a short time it was carried back to the church of Santa Rosa, where it remains to be used again in case the sea should again be refractory. The same evening a proclamation was issued, by the Prefect, calling the inhabitants back to their houses, assuring them that the alarm was false, and that in case the sea began to show symptoms of overflowing the signal-fort would be announced by the firing of three cannons, so that there would be time to escape. As yet the greater portion of the families who left Callao have not returned, and Lima the shaking and trembling still continue, and the panic is much greater there than here. The priests are preaching in the open air to the people, and are making quite a good speculation out of the matter."

THE WONDERS OF SOMNAMBULISM.

The Troy Times says:—Last night, about half-past one, Henry Ludford, a ferryman in the employ of Mr. Morrison, hearing a man call "over," arose from his bed, passed down stairs, out of doors, and down the long stairway to his skiff, got in, crossed the river, brought the passenger over who was calling, took his toll out of a quarter, fastened his boat, took the passenger over in the Mohawk basin boat, and re-crossed back again to his station on the Island, passed upstairs in the toll-house, where the ferrymen sleep, took the lighted lamp in his hand, passed to his bed, and knocked again to the hatchway, where stepped off and fell to the floor below, making a great racket and waking up all the rest of the hands, who hastened to see what was the matter, and, on inquiry, found that Ludford had been sound asleep all this time. Curiously enough he received but a few slight bruises by his fall. He remembered nothing of what had occurred, and was horrified when found lying on the floor, anxious to know how he came there, and ready enough to swear "by all that black and blue" that he had not been over with a passenger since an early hour in the evening. [illegible] made by him was taken from a table on which the quarter lay. The midnight passenger, on coming over this morning, called attention to the queer conduct of the ferryman, and said he never saw so dumb a chap before.

THE REVOLVER IN DOMESTIC CIRCLES.

"Southern life" was curiously illustrated the other day near Vicksburg, in Mississippi. Mr. and Mrs. Lee were on a visit with Mr Flowers, and do not agree very well. Mrs Lee is playing [illegible] with Mr. Flowers, and Mr Lee [illegible] and him looking on. He suddenly [illegible] determination to shoot Mrs Lee, and drawn a revolver and fires. Mr Flowers rushes to the fallen lady, supports her with his left arm, and with the other, instead of staunching the wound, or administering stimulants, as a cold-blooded Yankee might have done, draws another revolver, and quens fire over his left shoulder upon the guilty husband, bidding him halt in that gentleman's tone. The bodies were then rendered, the blood washed up, and, we presume, Mr Flowers reloaded his weapon to be ready for fresh accidents.

A SLAVE AND HER CHILDREN.

The following paragraph appears in the "Atlantic (Ga.) Confederacy," under the title of the "Devilish Act of a Negro Woman." We learned through a gentleman from Penfield yesterday, that a negro woman belonging to James Lankford, of that place, becoming tired of life, threw three of her children into a well, said to be 65 feet in depth, and then jumped in herself. Mr. Lankford went down after them, and found her still living and not entirely injured.—When he reached [illegible] attempted to drown them, [illegible] it was only by much force that he snatched him and brought him to the surface with the [illegible]. She is confined in the [illegible] and was on hand as it does [illegible] numerous and obstinately bent on fighting. I fear to be assailed in the position which I occupy. I will defend myself as long as possible, but if most prompt assistance be not sent I must confess I do not know where the affair will end. The ammunition of the artillery is almost finished; that of the infantry considerably diminished. I have 62 wounded. On Monday, in Callao, an alarm was raised that the sea was receding from the shore and presenting the same phenomenon as in 1849 during and preceding the sinking of old Callao.—People were to be seen running about greatly distracted and a general panic prevailed. All the roads leading out of Callao were lined with affrighted sinners, fleeing from the wrath to come. Special trains were running all day, carrying away hundreds to Lima, while the most devoted or fanatic went to Bella Vista, and took from the church the image of the Senor del Mar, the same that was used in 1749. A procession was formed, accompanied by a band of music and a guard of honour, and the image that was to calm the sea, and bring it back to a proper sense of its duty, was carried down to the mole with all the pomp and ceremony the Church could afford. After remaining a short time it was carried back to the church of Santa Rosa, where it remains to be used again in case the sea should again be refractory. The same evening a proclamation was issued, by the Prefect, calling the inhabitants back to their houses, assuring them that the alarm was false, and that in case the sea began to show symptoms of overflowing the signal-fort would be announced by the firing of three cannons, so that there would be time to escape. As yet the greater portion of the families who left Callao have not returned, and Lima the shaking and trembling still continue, and the panic is much greater there than here. The priests are preaching in the open air to the people, and are making quite a good speculation out of the matter."

THE WONDERS OF SOMNAMBULISM.

The Troy Times says:—Last night, about half-past one, Henry Ludford, a ferryman in the employ of Mr. Morrison, hearing a man call "over," arose from his bed, passed down stairs, out of doors, and down the long stairway to his skiff, got in, crossed the river, brought the passenger over who was calling, took his toll out of a quarter, fastened his boat, took the passenger over in the Mohawk basin boat, and re-crossed back again to his station on the Island, passed upstairs in the toll-house, where the ferrymen sleep, took the lighted lamp in his hand, passed to his bed, and knocked again to the hatchway, where stepped off and fell to the floor below, making a great racket and waking up all the rest of the hands, who hastened to see what was the matter, and, on inquiry, found that Ludford had been sound asleep all this time. Curiously enough he received but a few slight bruises by his fall. He remembered nothing of what had occurred, and was horrified when found lying on the floor, anxious to know how he came there, and ready enough to swear "by all that black and blue" that he had not been over with a passenger since an early hour in the evening. [illegible] made by him was taken from a table on which the quarter lay. The midnight passenger, on coming over this morning, called attention to the queer conduct of the ferryman, and said he never saw so dumb a chap before.

THE REVOLVER IN DOMESTIC CIRCLES.

"Southern life" was curiously illustrated the other day near Vicksburg, in Mississippi. Mr. and Mrs. Lee were on a visit with Mr Flowers, and do not agree very well. Mrs Lee is playing [illegible] with Mr. Flowers, and Mr Lee [illegible] and him looking on. He suddenly [illegible] determination to shoot Mrs Lee, and drawn a revolver and fires. Mr Flowers rushes to the fallen lady, supports her with his left arm, and with the other, instead of staunching the wound, or administering stimulants, as a cold-blooded Yankee might have done, draws another revolver, and quens fire over his left shoulder upon the guilty husband, bidding him halt in that gentleman's tone. The bodies were then rendered, the blood washed up, and, we presume, Mr Flowers reloaded his weapon to be ready for fresh accidents.

A SLAVE AND HER CHILDREN.

The following paragraph appears in the "Atlantic (Ga.) Confederacy," under the title of the "Devilish Act of a Negro Woman." We learned through a gentleman from Penfield yesterday, that a negro woman belonging to James Lankford, of that place, becoming tired of life, threw three of her children into a well, said to be 65 feet in depth, and then jumped in herself. Mr. Lankford went down after them, and found her still living and not entirely injured.—When he reached [illegible] attempted to drown them, [illegible] it was only by much force that he snatched him and brought him to the surface with the [illegible]. She is confined in the [illegible] and was on hand as it does [illegible] numerous and obstinately bent on fighting. I fear to be assailed in the position which I occupy. I will defend myself as long as possible, but if most prompt assistance be not sent I must confess I do not know where the affair will end. The ammunition of the artillery is almost finished; that of the infantry considerably diminished. I have 62 wounded. I cannot at this moment give an exact number of dead, as I am writing immediately after the retreat. I submit to your Excellency that if circumstances compel me I shall retreat on Alcamo. My column is surrounded by enemies who have occupied the mills and taken the flour prepared for the troops. The column fought with brisk firing, from 10 a. m., until 5 p. m., when I made my retreat.

EARTHQUAKES IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Repeated earthquake shocks of the most violent character have been experienced at Callao and in various other parts of Peru. Early in the morning of the 19th of April one shock lasted 80 seconds. This was said to have been the heaviest shock that had been experienced since the submerging of old Callao, and the general opinion was that Lima and Callao could not stand a much heavier shaking. However on the following Sunday, at half-past 1 p. m., the ground commenced to shake in good earnest, but lasted only 15 seconds, doing in that short space of time the estimated damage, in Lima, of $1,000,000 in Callao about $20,000 and in Chorillos about $10,000; and destroying several estates in Canete, which were set down at 200,000. There was not a dwelling in Callao, Lima or Chorillos, that had not suffered damage,—walls cracked, rocks fallen in, people wounded, and churches left in such a condition that steeples would have to be torn down. In Manta trees were rooted out of the ground, and one of the mountains close by was rent in two and produced a volcano of hot fetid water. The earthquake then took a northern course, the worst effect was in Cante; the greatest state of alarm existed. All the public squares were occupied by families who preferred the open air to their insecure homes. A letter from Callao dated the 27th April says:—

"Up to the present time slight shocks continue to be felt; I have counted 28, but there have been many more. On Monday, in Callao, an alarm was raised that the sea was receding from the shore and presenting the same phenomenon as in 1849 during and preceding the sinking of old Callao.—People were to be seen running about greatly distracted and a general panic prevailed. All the roads leading out of Callao were lined with affrighted sinners, fleeing from the wrath to come. Special trains were running all day, carrying away hundreds to Lima, while the most devoted or fanatic went to Bella Vista, and took from the church the image of the Senor del Mar, the same that was used in 1749. THE CLUXTON APPEAL CASE.

Mayor's Office,
Peterboro', June 16th, 1860.

JAMES EDWARDS, Esq.,
Clerk and Treasurer,

SIR,—As you were present in Court when Cluxton's appeal case was tried last Wednesday, and the unpleasant conflict occurred between myself and his Honor the County Judge; and as you were present also in the Mayor's Office on the following day when the Judge visited me; I beg to ask whether you recollect the nature of that visit, as there is a contradiction between myself and his Honor on that subject.

I am, sir,
Your ob't. serv't.
A. SAWERS,
Mayor.

Clerk's Office, June 16th, 1860.

A. SAWERS, Esq., Mayor.

SIR,—In reply to your note of this date, as to my recollection of the nature of the visit of Judge Boucher to the office on Thursday last, I understood his Honor that he called to say that there should be a new trial in Cluxton's case, and that it should have been referred to the jury.

I looked upon it as an apology for his conduct on the Bench towards you in the above case, and represented it as such to a person shortly after the Judge left the office and before I had any conversation with you.

I am, sir,
Your obd't serv't,
J. EDWARDS,

[Copy.]

Peterboro', June 16th, 1860.

TO HIS HONOR THE JUDGE.

SIR,—As in consequence of the misunderstanding between us this morning, the enclosed correspondence will be published; I feel it my duty to furnish you with a copy so that if you desire to meet it, you may not be unprepared.

I have the honor to be
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. SAWERS.

[Copy.]

Peterboro', 18th June, '60.

TO HIS WORSHIP THE MAYOR OF PETERBORO'.

SIR,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of yours of the 16th inst., enclosed with copies of your correspondence with Mr. Edwards, which you announce your intention of publishing.

I regret the misconception by you and the Town Clerk of my motives in calling upon you on Thursday; not being then aware that I had [in your opinion] done you any injury or shewn you any want of courtesy, I could not suppose that any apology was either due or required.

It was agreed by the Bench with the consent of the counsel for the appellant that the case between Mr. Cluxton and the Town, should stand as if for trial, at the next General Quarter Sessions. And as I happened, after the rising of the Court on Thursday morning, to pass close to your office, I entered it for the purpose of informing you thereof, an act of courtesy on my part, paid to you as chief magistrate of the Town.

I have the honor to remain,
Sir,
Your most obed't serv't.
R. M. BOUCHER.

A. Sawers, Esq., Mayor.

We publish above copies of a correspondence between the Mayor, the Judge, and Mr. Edwards. On the day following Mr. Boucher's unwarranted interference in the hearing of Mr. Cluxton's appeal, his Honor very properly apologized to Mr. Sawers, and a reconciliation took place. On the next day the judge having in the meantime heard that the apology was no longer a secret, and seeing Mr. Sawers opposite Mr. Fortye's office, invited him in, and accused him with great rudeness of having stated this fact, denying at the same time that there was any truth in it. Hot words ensued, and Mr. Sawers immediately addressed Mr. Edwards on the subject. Mr. Edwards' letter in answer convicts the judge of bad faith, and establishes beyond dispute by the circumstances related, that Mr. Sawers truly represented Mr. Boucher's visit as acknowledging injury and promising atonement. What more is necessary to constitute an apology?

But let us take under examination Mr. Boucher's own statement. After the cause passed upon the Judge in Court, can he say, without nothing himself ridiculous, that he was not aware that Mr. Sawers felt he had been injured by him? Would not the judge himself naturally feel resentment for the indignant treatment he then suffered? Does not the very fact stated by the Judge, that the Bench overruled his reversal of the Mayor's decision, prove the injury done?—Mr. Boucher did not commit his brother magistrates at the hearing. He decided to reverse the decision upon his own motion, quite indifferent to the opinions of the two magistrates sitting by his side. And mark it well, Mr. Boucher, the point upon which you decided against the Mayor was discussed before the evidence was gone into, and [illegible] before [illegible]. But when the evidence came to consist Clarion, Mr. Weller introduced this point a second time, and it was triumphantly successful.—Mr. Boucher's object, the Review, in describing this visit, says, "the judge quashed the decision without the formality of submitting it to the jury, upon the last of the four objections urged by McCluxton's counsel, viz. that the information upon which Mr. Cluxton was tried was informal and insufficient. It is quite clear that all of the objections were absolutely untenable." How unkind of Mr. Sawers not to preserve in silence the Judge's acknowledgment of wrong, and allow the organ to trumpet forth his Honor's infallibility, so as the Judge's decision be respected and the Mayor's despised!

The Review says the Mayor "would set aside all law to punish an opponent, and next would set aside all law to shield a friend." Surely they cannot be intended as a sarcasm upon his honor the judge.

To conclude upon this unfortunate case, we dare tell his honor Judge Boucher that either he owed Mr. Sawers an apology, or Mr. Sawers owed him. If the latter is the correct position, then this honor the judge committed a breach of etiquette, and showed a deplorable absence of self respect, when he condescended to visit the Mayor until satisfaction was made. But if the apology was due, and made to Mr. Sawers then the judge should not be ashamed, but rather rejoice that his own good sense could overrule his pride. If due but not made, Mr. Boucher had better be no longer a defaulter in the matter, since all his own friends, who are not incorrigible flunkeys, confess the wrong.

THE ARNOTT APPEAL CASE.

Last week we stated that it was understood the penalty of twenty dollars imposed upon Mr. Arnott would be remitted. This has been done, and being so, we have a few remarks thereupon to address to his honor Judge Boucher. His Honor, in charging the jury, took occasion to say that the statute under which Arnott had been tried before the Mayor was so plain and so imperative, and Arnott's offence so well established, that he could not conceive by what ingenuity the Mayor had allowed him to go free. To quote from the Judge's organ the Review,—"The Judge clearly pointed out what every man—not a hopeless fool—already knew and recognized (quite a compliment to the court and jury) that the question of the lordship or mildness of the law was not for the consideration of the magistrate, and that while the law remained upon the statute book, it must be obeyed and enforced." Very good your Honor! And how did you carry out your own principle? The jury convicted—you applied the law by giving judgment that Arnott pay a fine of twenty dollars. So far so good. But next day you took off the penalty. Where is your law for that? Who was to benefit by the penalty? The informer under the law receives one half, and the corporation of the town of Peterboro the other half. The informer may have consented to forego his share, but what about the Town's share? Did you usurp the functions of the corporation, an act you had already condemned in the Mayor, who is a nearer relative to that body than your Honor? Look into your law books, Judge Boucher, and see if they do not teach you that on appeal from the magistrate to the Quarter Sessions, the Court on the finding of a jury shall thereupon give such judgment as the circumstances of the case require, NOT as the court deem meet. You know what the circumstances of the case require—you told the jury that, when you condemned the Mayor for not enforcing the law. Be consistent, Judge Boucher, and you may be respected; but if it is your aim, in common with other small minds, to degrade the Mayor in the eyes of his neighbours, be careful that you have the law with you when you condemn his acts, lest in the skirmish you lose some of your own laurels.

LITERARY NOTICE.

One of the most interesting and useful publications which comes to our sanctum is the Scientific American, a weekly publication, devoted to popular science, new inventions, and the whole range of mechanic and manufacturing arts. The Scientific American has been published for fifteen years, by the well-known Patent Solicitors, Messrs. Munn, & Co., 37 Park Row, New York; and has yearly increased in interest and circulation, until it has attained, we understand, nearly 30,000 subscribers, which is the best of evidence that the publication is appreciated by the reading public.

To those of our readers who may not be familiar with the character of the paper, we will state some of the subjects of which it treats. Its illustrated descriptions of all the most important improvements in steam and agricultural machinery, will commend it to the Engineer and Farmer, while the new household inventions and shop tools which are illustrated by engravings and described in its columns, with the practical receipts contained in every number, renders the work desirable to housekeepers, and almost indispensible to every mechanic or smith who has a shop for manufacturing new work, or repairing old.

The Scientific American is universally regarded as the inventor's advocate and monitor; the repository of American inventions, and the great authority at law, in all business connected with Patents. The Official List of Claims, as issued weekly from the Patent Office, in Washington, are published regularly in its columns. All the most important Patents issued by the United States Patent Office are illustrated and described on its pages, thus forming an unrivalled history of American invention.

It is not only the best, but the largest and cheapest paper devoted to Science, Mechanics, Manufactures, and the Useful Arts published in the world. Hon. Judge Mason, formerly Commissioner of Patents, is not only engaged with the publishers in their immense Patent Agency department, but as a writer on Patent Laws and Practice, his ability is forcibly portrayed in the columns of this paper.

The Scientific American is published once a week, (every Saturday,) each number containing 16 pages of Letter-press and from 10 to 12 original Engravings of New Inventions, consisting of the most improved Tools, Engines, Mills, Agricultural Machines and Household Utensils, making 32 numbers in a year, containing 320 pages, and over 200 Original Engravings, [illegible] list of Patents [illegible] and a title page and table of contents for binding, and all for $2 per annum.

A new volume commences on the 1st of July, and we hope a large number of our customers will avail themselves of the present opportunity to subscribe. By remitting $2 by mail to the publishers, Munn & Co., 37 Park Row, New York, they will send you their paper one year, at the end of which time you will have a volume which you would not part with for treble its cost. The publishers express their willingness to mail a single copy of the paper to such as may wish to see it without charge.

The Review thinks the Mayor ought to have prevented the beer being drunk in Arnott's shop. What does he think of the tempter?

The Review speaking of Mr. Edwards' evidence in Cluxton's appeal says,—"It was to the effect that he had heard Mr. Sawers say that as the Council had refused to pay him a salary he was determined to make it up in fines." Mr. Edwards said no such thing, but on the contrary, that although the Council had passed a resolution giving the fees to the Mayor instead of salary, they afterwards by resolution claimed the fees as part of the revenue of the town. Mr. Weller mentioned that the Mayor could collect his salary in court. Mr. Edwards stated positively that Mr. Sawers benefitted not one cent by any case heard before him, and broke up Mr. Weller's argument.

The Review commits a contradiction of sense when he approvingly announces "That the costs of the appeal, amounting as it said to about as much as the fine, are to be paid by Arnott;" and that "as it was not Arnott's fault that the Mayor did not do his duty, their Honors rightly considered Arnott should not suffer for the folly of another." Fine and costs, if you please Mr. Review, but declared innocence must not be taxed with costs.

TOWN COUNCIL.

MONDAY, June 18th, 1860.

The Council met—His Worship the Mayor presiding.

Present—Messrs. Morrow, McDougal, Ormond, Walton, O'Beirne, Chamberlen, Ryan, Hartt, Maloney and Whyte.

Minutes of the last meeting read and confirmed.

Communications from R. Wilson and A. Morrow, jr., respectively, asking the $100 Reward offered by the Council were received.

A petition from Geo. McComb and others asking the Council to repair the sidewalk on the south side of Simcoe street was read and referred to committee on Streets and Bridges.

The following report from the Streets and Bridges Committee was read, and after considerable discussion received:

Report of Streets and Bridges Committee to the Mayor and Town Council.

Committee on Streets and Bridges report as follows; for work done viz: Filling hole in at Spalding's Bay on George Street. Repairing side-walk on George Street. Filling hole at Bridge across raceway at Dixon and Loudon streets. Laying side-walk at Union School, and gravelling hill and Brock Street. Amounting to $24 45, including bills as follows:

Henry Crone	$7 05
John Sullivan	5 50
Thomas Harrison	2 00
Michael Kennedy	2 40
F. A. Erskine	7 50
Amounting to	$24 45

The above bills submitted are correct and we recommend them to be paid.

Your Committee has further to report that they have examined the Streets and Bridges and find that it will require for repairs this year, as follows:—

For Raising and Repairing at Mr Fortye's on Aylmer Street	$ 15 00
Planking Bridge on Geo. street at Spalding's Bay	20 00
Repairing Bridge and side-walk on Charlotte Street	6 00
Repairing side-walk on Water st. new crossing at Bank Montreal	60 00
Repairing side-walk on Geo. street from Brock to London streets	12 00
Repairing side-walk on London st. from George to Aylmer streets	8 00

Plank crossing at corner of Mr. Lawson's Hotel	9 00
For general repairs during the year.	151 55
Full amount for this year's expenditures on streets and Bridges	$300 00

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Signed
R. WALTON.
R. B. McDOUGALL.
JOHN MALONEY.

A petition from P. Brennan asking the Council for a Beer License at a reduced rate was referred to the License Inspector.

A petition from Mr. W. Eastland asking leave to raise at his own cost the side walk in front of his and John Clarke's premises, on a grade with the other portions of the side-walk on either side was referred to the Streets and Bridges Committee with power to concede the prayer thereof, if they thought proper.

Mr. O'Beirne moved, seconded by Mr. Ormond—That Whereas, owing to the state of the Finances of the Town for the present year the rate due by the town of Peterborough to the united counties for the year 1859 has not yet been paid, and Whereas the town is not yet in a position to pay it, and it is therefore expedient that an application shall be made to the Council of the United Counties to extend the time for the payment thereof until the funds be realized from Collection of rates in the autumn.—Resolved therefore that the Mayor be requested and authorized to attend at the approaching meeting of the Counties Council and endeavour to obtain for the Town the time required for the payment of the same rate, and that the Mayor be further authorized to instruct the Counties Council that the rate will be paid out of the first moneys collected in the fall, and further also that the Clerk be requested forthwith to forward a copy of this resolution to the Clerk of the Counties' Council.

Accounts from F. A. Erskine and others employed by the Streets and Bridges committee, were handed to Finance Committee.

The Council then adjourned till Monday evening next.

"An opinion prevails pretty generally, in what is considered well-informed circles, at Toronto, that a general election will take place previous to another session of the Legislature." So says a contemporary. So much is he, in order that the Mayor may be gagged effectually, ready and willing to bow to Lower Canada dictation for a "mess of pottage."

Local Items.

☞ During the thunderstorm on Monday night last, a span of horses on the farm of Mr. Geo. McKee, South, were struck by lightning and instantly killed.

FIRE!—The carriage factory of Mr. E. C. Hill, on Hunter Street was totally destroyed by fire yesterday morning.—Probable loss $2,000; partly covered by insurance. There is no room to doubt that the fire was the work of an incendiary.

CAMP MEETING.—We understand that a Camp Meeting, in connection with the Wesleyan Methodist Church will take place near Millbrook, early next month.—Rev. Dr. Stinson is expected to assist in the duties of the occasion.

ROBERTS who was indicted for larceny at the Quarter Sessions, plead guilty, and was sentenced to imprisonment in the Provincial Penitentiary for 3 years. We are told that on the Deputy Sheriff handing him over to the keepers of the Prison at Kingston, they at once recognized him as an old "bird," from their cage. It seems this Roberts alias Jones, alias half-a-dozen-other-names has been under the care of the turn-keys as many times as he had different names, and for as many different offences, one of the latter being that he was a practical believer in the doctrine of Saint Joe Smith,—polygamy.

KILLED.—On Wednesday afternoon 13th, the passenger train from Port Hope to Lindsay ran over and killed a man on the embankment across Cottingham's mill pond, at Omemee. The deceased whose name was Douglass, was lying between the rails and is supposed to have been asleep. He was partially hidden by grass of considerable length, and was not seen by the engineer in time to stop the train which passed entirely over him. He was not struck by the engine, but was killed by the brakes or rods under the cars. A Coroner's inquest was held upon the body and a verdict rendered in accordance with the above facts.

☞ The Soiree of the Otonabee Division Sons of Temperance yesterday, was a successful one, considering the very unfavorable state of the weather. About two hundred persons were on the ground, and in the intervals between the showers a good tea was served up, a few pieces of appropriate music were sung, and three or four pointed speeches delivered. The party separated about six o'clock, all apparently in good spirits, and nothing the worse of the dampening.

TEARING DOWN BILLS.—For the information of mischievous juveniles and senseless adults we may state that the law provides against the practice of tearing down posters and show-bills, on fences and street-corners. We are resolved to bring before the Mayor the offender in every instance of this wilful destruction of property, that may hereafter come under our notice.

MOUNT HOPE TRIPOLI.—The Scientific American, the best authority in the country on matters scientific, speaks of tripoli in the following terms:—

"It is composed almost entirely of silica, and appears to have been formed of the skeletons of minute animalculæ. We have received some samples of this substance from S. Lewis, of Port Hope (C. W.), which appear to be of a very superior quality; being dry and free from calcareous earth.

Articles of brass, copper, steel and tin may be cleaned and polished with a paste of tripoli and sweet oil, rubbed on with a piece of flannel, then "finished off" with soft leather. Lacquered and gilded articles are spoiled by frequent rubbing, and by acids and alkaline leys. A fine [illegible] may be given to brass ornaments, which [illegible] or lacquered, with a little oil and [illegible] fine powder, moistened with soft water.—The articles must be afterwards rubbed dry with whiting. Another plan is to wash the brass-work with a strong liquor of alum (1 oz. to water, 1 pint); and after rinsing it in clean water and drying, to "finish it off" with fine tripoli."

The genuine article may be had at Messrs. Stewart & Gallen's, and is for sale by every crockery, hardware, and jewelry dealer in the country.

We learn that the Rev. Mr. Clementi will preach an appropriate sermon on the Masonic fraternity, on Sunday evening, 24th inst., (St. John's day.)

From the Rev'd gentleman's acknowledged talent, and the fact that he himself belongs to the "mystic tie," we anticipate something very interesting will be heard.—The sermon will be preached in the English Church, when no doubt a large audience irrespective of the Masons will be present.

POLITICAL STAGNATION.

In this portion of Her Majesty's dominions politics are at present as dull as ditch-water, and almost as odoriferous. People turn from them as from a nuisance. Their very professors ashamed to speak of them, would feign forget that such things are.—The zealot who should call a meeting of his friends to discuss joint authority, or to fathom the depths of ministerial iniquity, or to explain away the mysteries of that memorable document, would be pronounced ripe for Dr. Workman's care. Editors have almost ceased to bore their readers upon the subject; preferring rather to follow Garibaldi over the rugged roads of Sicily, or to debate with professional originality the bearings of the Eastern question, and the ever-recurring illustrations of Napoleonic infancy. The Globe, even, has appeared three days in succession without a word about "Lower Canada Domination;" a fact not less remarkable—as a friend observes us—than aught discovered by Dr. Cumming in his pre-millennial researches. The ministerial Leader and Colonist, having pummelled each other thoroughly like Heenan and Sayers, have followed them distinguished heroes from the field, and now discourse sweet music about everything but politics. Mr. Brown when last heard from was eating strawberries and cream, with the appetite of a corruptionist, in a Broadway saloon and Mr. John A. Macdonald, we venture to say, is Church and joined the reformed Calvinistic Church of France."

JAPAN.

"Dr. Hepburn, a missionary physician, states in a letter to a friend says: "The people are friendly and civil. We are great objects of curiosity. The Government thus far have not interfered with us, although they know evidently who we are and the object of our coming. We know that we are under close surveillance, and all our doings are reported to the rulers."—Ayrshire Ext.

ITALY.

ROME.—A correspondent of the London Times speaks thus of the state of things in the "City of the Seven Hill." "The intense hatred of the Romans for the Priests and priestly domination loses none of its intensity. That the Romans, with scarcely any exception, are utterly dead to all veneration for what distant Romanism held most sacred and holy, has been a matter of universal notoriety since the days of Dante and Boccacio. In 1860, the Papal conch and its occupants' blessings are shunned as the plague. People take to their heels whenever he appears." And a correspondent of the Glasgow Commonwealth writing from Rome says, "There are many reasons to hope that the efforts the people of Italy are now making for civil liberty are not destitute of a religious element; and it is evident that the Romans are ripening fast for what in Scripture is termed the "great earthquake."

"According to letters lately received from correspondents in Rome, Florence, Saloroo and Pisa and other parts of this benighted land, there is a great demand for New Testaments and in them as well as in the rural parts of Italy, it is read with avidity."—Scottish Pioneer and old Independent Magazine.

SPAIN.

"Several years ago when the author of the "Gipsies in Spain" visited the Peninsula for the purpose of distributing the word of God in the rural parts of the country, he met many difficulties, caused by the opposition of Nuns, Friars and Monks, distributed some hundred copies of the Bible, and of late, owing to the labors of the French Protestants, aided by the Waldensian Synod, whose centre is Turin, copies of the Word of God are in circulation in Galicia, Asturias and Biscay, &c. As the laws of Spain are very severe against what is called "Heresy", the circulation of the Bible is carried on by stealth; the number distributed is now ten times greater than when Borrow visited Spain."—Paris Correspondent of the Scottish Presbyterian.

TURKEY IN EUROPE.

"A remarkable movement has of late taken place in this country. A native of the country, well educated and belonging to the upper ranks of society, has discarded Mohammedanism, his followers number many hundreds. His doctrine is Christian, and solely derived from the Bible; and the members of his fraternity are rapidly on the increase, especially in the north of Turkey."—Scottish Nonconformist.

NORWAY.

"A revival, and accordingly a glorious one, is now in progress in these parts of this country. Small was much needed, for generally speaking, the clergy and people was, till of late, Christians only in name. Prayer and family worship were things generally neglected; while the Theatre and ball-room were well attended. Prayer meetings and fellowship meetings now occupy the time and attention of many. Sabbath desecration was at one time general, now a change for the better is taking place in many places. In many points the cardinal doctrines of the Gospel system such as God's sovereignty, original sin, and effectual calling, have taken the place of pernicious error. And the theology of the men, the agents in the hands of God in this movement, is that of Dort and Westminster, and which has numbered among its advocates and defenders the time honored names of Kipp, Boston, Rutherford, the Erskines, McCrie, Stevenson, and Symington."—Old Dissenter.

TRINITY COLLEGE.

A statute to the following effect was passed by the Corporation of Trinity College at its meeting on the 3rd April:—

That in consideration of the small opportunity which the members of the Church in the Province, have hitherto possessed of availing themselves of a University education, Candidates be admitted to degrees in Arts, by examination, without residence or attendance at lectures, for the space of five years, beginning from October 1860, under the following regulations:

I. All Candidates shall be members of the United Church of England and Ireland.

II. They shall produce testimonies both of good conduct and attainment, signed by at least one parochial Clergyman, and by two Laymen of respectability.

III. They shall satisfy the Corporation that professional duties preclude the possibility of their passing through a regular College course.

IV. No Candidate shall be less than twenty five years of age.

V. These regulations shall in no way affect the regulations already made respecting Divinity Students.

VI. Candidates shall pass the several University Examinations, that is to say, the Examination for Matriculation, the previous Examinations, and the Examination for the degree of B. A., at the usual intervals.

N. B.—Under this statute Candidates possessing the requisite qualifications, will be admitted to the second Matriculation Examination from October, 1860, to October, 1864, both inclusive; and may afterwards present themselves at the previous Examination and at the Examination for B. A. as may appear, provided that they do not in any case anticipate the ordinary term of passing these Examinations. The Previous Examination takes place at the end of the Lent Term of the year next but one following that in which the Matriculation Examination is passed, and the Examination for B. A., takes place three years after Matriculation.

—Preparations have been made in New York to receive the monster steamship Great Eastern on her arrival. She is expected about next August. The extensive wharf in front of Brickland, 1,200 feet in length, running from Thirteenth street to North River, 24 feet deep at low tide, and the will be dressed alongside it during the day in New York.

—At Stanstead (Lower), of the cause of Watson, conveying to the military train at Wapping, has within the last few days contracted to convey the mails between Stanstead and Compton, a distance of 18 miles, for the sum of £1,000. He has commenced the service with 17 horses and 7 sleighs.

BY THE "BOHEMIAN."

GARIBALDI STILL SUCCESSFUL.

AID TO NAPLES REFUSED.

BREADSTUFFS RISING.

FATHER POINT, June 17.

The Bohemian passed up at 8. 15, p. m. She brings 49 cabin and 100 steerage passengers.

Garibaldi having captured part of the artillery on the 29th, is reported to have stormed the citadel of Palermo, and subsequently concluded the armistice on the proposition of the Neapolitan General.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Further unfavourable weather having retarded the work on the Great Eastern, the directors have deferred her departure for a short time, confidently expecting that she will not sail within a fortnight. The day of her departure will not be announced until there is no possibility of farther disappointment.

The Post Office authorities have notified the Galway line that their fortnightly service is to commence on the 29th June; from Galway to New York on the 10th July; Galway to Boston and so on every second Tuesday for homeward passage; the first departure from New York is fixed for Tuesday, 17th July, and first from Boston, 31st July. An extraordinary meeting is to be held to obtain authority to borrow money.

THE INSURRECTION IN SICILY.

The insurrection in Sicily at the date of the late despatch, and the struggle at Palermo, and the bombardment of the city continued.

The Neapolitan troops are concentrated in the Royal Palace and the castle, which are situated at the two extremities of Palermo. Garibaldi demanded they should evacuate these positions.

Other despatches assert that the capitulation was signed on board the British war steamer Hannibal, between General Lanza, Garibaldi and the Revolutionary Committee, in which it was stipulated that the Neapolitan army of 25,000 strong should quit Palermo, with all the honours of war, and embark with their material on board the Neapolitan squadron.

Subsequent despatches indicate this statement as only partially correct.

Advices from Naples of the 3rd, received via Genoa, state that the King refused the conditions of capitulation, and that hostilities would commence at 8000.

A despatch from Turin announces the renewal of the bombardment of Palermo.—The town was barricaded and part of the Royal troops surrounded by the insurgents.

A Neapolitan General is said to have gone over to the insurgents.

LATER BY TELEGRAPH.

PALERMO, 3rd, Evening.—A despatch announces that the bombardment had not been renewed. An armistice continued. Garibaldi is still master of the town, but the forts are not occupied, capitulations not having been carried out.

Negotiations continued.

Retires from the French equadron say:—An armistice was agreed to last till Tuesday the 5th.

Garibaldi forced the Royal troops to grant an armistice for want of ammunition. Messina is quite deserted.

The enthusiasm in favour of Garibaldi was spreading. The Neapolitan troops were becoming more and more affected by it.

The clergy in Sicily were publicly preaching a crusade against the Neapolitan Government.

It is stated that Signor Carafa, in a circular note, had demanded a guarantee for the Territory of the Two Sicilies, and had called for the intervention of the maritime powers.

Piedmont it is said, protested against any intervention, and is represented to have made application to the Emperor of the French, but received an immediate answer in the negative.

Many officers in the Sardinian army had obtained discharges for the purpose of joining Garibaldi.

A despatch, dated Naples 3rd, says 4,000 insurgents having pieces of cannon attacked Catania on the 1st. They were bravely repulsed by General Clay with the 6th Chasseurs, one regiment and some artillery, after a combat of eight hours, in which the insurgents were dispersed, losing three cannons and two flags. The city has been declared in a state of siege.

The Neapolitan minister at Rome had been summoned to Naples. It is reported that he would be entrusted with the formation of a new Ministry.

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Commons on the 4th, Mr. Gladstone stated that another vote of £30,000 on account of the China war, would be taken in addition to the £85,000 already granted, and that the Secretary of War would shortly give full details of the requirement.

After some obstructive proceedings on the part of the Opposition, the Reform Bill was debated in committee. Lord John Russel, in the course of his remarks said there was no truth in the rumour that the Government intended to postpone the measure until next session. He thought it of great importance that the Reform Bill for England should be at once proceeded with, but said it was impossible to proceed with Irish and Scotch measures this session.

Mr. Disraeli defended the course of the Conservatives. He thought if the Government proceeded with the Bill now, it would be without the slightest necessity, and in opposition to its own convictions.

Mr. McKenzie moved that the bill be postponed till after the result of the approaching census is ascertained, and after some debate the matter was postponed till the 7th inst.

Lord Palmerston stated, in reply to Mr. Wyllie, that the Admiralty intend to furnish ships for surveying the northern seas, in connection with a project for laying down a telegraph cable between England and America by way of Iceland.

A Company is said to be in course of formation to run a line of steamers between England and India, via the Cape. The vessels are to be 6,000 tons register, with power enough to perform the service inside of 45 days.

Field Marshal, the Earl of Strafford is dead, aged 88 years.

Recruiting for the Pope's army makes active progress in Ireland, and is assisted by the publication of the account of the grand ovation which had been accorded to recruits at Rome.

Sligoe and Boston had commenced a sporting tour in the provinces, and attracted great attendance, at high prices, in Manchester and Liverpool.

FRANCE.

The Emperor and Empress had the Emperor and the Empress of Russia

—The passengers by the steamship John Bell, on her last voyage, presented an address to the chief officer, Captain Alexander Donaldson Aird, thanking him for his kindness, and complimenting him upon his efficiency.

—The Madison (Iowa) Plaindealer says, that a poor, miserable wretch, living near Farmington, in Van Buren County, while horribly blaspheming God on Sunday last, for withholding rain from his suffering crops, was suddenly struck with palsy and almost immediately died.

TORONTO MARKETS.

Wednesday, June 20th.

Fall Wheat $1 20 to $1 25c.
Spring Wheat $1 10c to $1 15c.
Flour, Extra $6 60c a $6 25 per barrel
Superfine $5 20c; Fancy $5 75.
Oats 35c to 36c per bushel.

took place at Lyons on the 1st June.

Trade continued very dull.

The markets for breadstuffs in Paris were firmer. Flour had advanced 1f a 2½ per sack.

The Bourse had been animated, and barely ¼ per cent. higher, but on the 5th was very flat.

SPAIN.

A manifesto signed "Juan of Bourbon," and addressed to the Spanish Courts is published. In it the writer lays claims to the Throne of Spain, in consequence of the abdication of his rights by his brother Charles on the 22rd of April last. He disclaims all ideas of gaining the Crown by force.

The treaty with Morocco was published. The payment on account of the indemnity to be made by Morocco on the 1st of July.

Cardinal Wiseman was about to visit Spain to advocate the claims of the Pope for pecuniary aid.

RUSSIA.

The Gazette du Nord states that the principal measures proposed for emancipation of Serfs in Russia had been adopted by a majority of the Deputies of the Nobles, and that general enfranchisement would be realized next Autumn.

TURKEY.

It is stated that the French and Russian Ambassadors at Constantinople officially informed the Porte that their Government approved of the resolution to institute an enquiry into the situation of Christians in Turkey, of its own free will.

The disturbances reported at Beyrout between the Christians and Druses had assumed hostile attitudes.

INDIA AND CHINA.

The India and China mails with dates from Bombay to May 4th, Calcutta 8th, and Hong Kong, April 26th, reached England; the American portion would go forward in the Illinois.

Transports with English and French troops were reaching China in quick succession.

It is reported from Shanghai that the ultimatum had again been sent to the Chinese, but accompanied by a demand for indemnity. It was thought that its effect would be simply to embolden the Chinese.

It was understood that in the event of hostilities no blockade would be enforced southward of the Gulf of echoli.

The rebels in the neighbourhood of Canton were causing great injury to trade.

In Japan a serious conflict had taken place between the followers of an insurgent chief and those of the Regent. Foreigners were in much alarm. The insurgent leader was bitterly opposed to the concession made by them under the treaty.

LONDON MONEY MARKET.—The demand for money was on a moderate scale, and the rate in open market was fractionally below the Bank minimum. Funds had shown rather more firmness, and consols slightly advanced. On the 5th, however the market was dull, and prices declined ¼ per cent.

The Londonderry Advertiser says that in the event of Mr. McKinnon's amendment being carried, the effect would be the postponement of the Reform Bill indefinitely.

Lord John Russell and Mr. Gladstone will resign in the assumed contingency, and it is understood that Earl Clarendon would return to the Foreign office, and Sir C. Lewis to the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The Conservative party do not wish to see the Palmerston Administration overthrown.

Nothing positive is known as the subject of the armistice.

BY THE "CITY OF WASHINGTON."

New York, June 19.

The City of Washington has arrived with London advices, via Queenstown, of the 8th. She passed on the 7th inst., a steamer supposed to be the steamer Canadian from Quebec on the 8th, and the Vanderbilt on the 10th.

The India and China mails were forwarded from Southampton on the 6th, by the steamer Illinois.

London, June 8.—Although yesterday was a settling day, the Money market was without fluctuation. Transactions unimportant. Consols closed same as Wednesday.

The Galway Steamship Company will hold an extraordinary meeting on the 20th. The Directors ask power to borrow half a million pounds to enable them to fully develope the undertaking.

The Advertiser says the effect of the passage of Mr. McKennon's amendment to the Reform Bill, will be the postponement of the Bill indefinitely, in which contingency Lord John Russell and Mr. Gladstone will resign. It is understood that Lord Clarendon would return to the Foreign Office, and Sir George Cornwall Lewis would be Chancellor of the Exchequer.

A report in the Stock Exchange says that Pullinger, the defaulter's case, leaves upwards of £172,000 unaccounted for, the great part of which probably went upon the turf.

A Paris despatch says France promptly refused the request of Naples for foreign intervention in Sicily.

Advices from Sicily say nothing is positively known respecting the armistice.—Some authorities say it is prolonged indefinately; other, only to the 7th.

The Malta Observer of the 2nd of June says, it was the Neapolitan General who asked an armistice in order to bury the dead. Garibaldi at once agreed on an armistice of 24 hours. Subsequently the Neapolitan asked three days, which Garibaldi not only granted but offered to prolong it for weeks.

A telegraph from Naples says that the King has proposed to grant a constitution based upon French institution.

The Pope is reported to have expressed the belief that Napoleon and Victor Emanuel had resolved to execute the scheme proposed in the pamphlet entitled the Pope and the Congress.

ON THE CULTURE OF CELERY.

There is not a better and more wholesome vegetable in the garden than celery, and it is easily raised provided the plants are obtained early in the season. The seed should be sown on a moderate hot-bed in March, and to admit of it forming good roots, the soil of which said bed is composed should be at least three inches. In order to have the plants strong and well-established when they are to be transplanted into a cold frame, and rich compost, after they have made their third leaf, is one principle delays the growth of the plant; consequently, it should not be resorted to except they have been started early. We have raised a thousand plants in a hot-bed from ½ ounce of seed.

In order to have celery of superior quality, a compost should be prepared in the beginning of spring, of rich swamp muck or leaf mould and the decayed manure of an old hot-bed or any other rich well rotted dung. Celery is a marsh plant and delights in a light mossy soil. When the plants are strong enough to put out, trenches should be dug at least one foot deeper, fifteen inches wide and five or six feet asunder, and nearly filled with this well prepared compost, a portion of the best of the soil which has been removed from the trench may be mixed with the compost, and the garden rake used to pulverise and prepare the place for the reception of the plants. In doing all this, the gardner should be careful not to tramp the compost in the trenches, he should stand in the intervals, and use a line to direct him in putting in the plants.

The best time for transplanting celery is when the ground is moist after a sunny shower, and the roots and tops should be shortened, if they happen to be long and straggling, when they have been transplanted before the final setting out, or raised very far apart in the bed, a transplanting trowel may be used, and a ball taken up with each plant. The best celery we have ever raised was planted between every second row of peas. The peas shaded the young plants from the sun, and when they were used up and removed, the drills of celery stood six feet asunder, and all the soil in the intervals was from time to time piled up around the plants in order to bleach them. It is not a good plan to keep them molded up very high while they are in a growing state. It is better to let them have a good start, and when they have grown to a large size, to apply a considerable quantity of mould at once, taking care that a moderately dry day is chosen for the operation, and that the leaves are all collected and kept close together. When the moulding is done while the soil is wet and clammy, the plants are apt to be injured by a kind of rust and also to be eaten by worms. We have raised celery in drills four feet asunder and the plants six inches apart in the drills, but if it is required to be very large, the drills must be farther asunder. We notice that a New York gardener professes to have discovered a method of making celery grow in winter. —Boston Cultivator.

THE CROPS ABOUT COBOURG.

EDITORS AGRICULTURIST,—Our crops have been got all in in excellent condition. Indeed I think I never saw the ground in finer order than it has been this spring. All spring crops are looking well. The fine rains of last week were very beneficial.—There is little fall wheat around here, and in the back parts of the Township much had to be plowed up and the ground sown with spring wheat.

Our early sown carrots and mangels are coming up. Turnips not sown yet. Large quantities of newly seeded clover had to be plowed up, as the seeds were winter killed, so that hay will not be a large crop, even if what is left should turn out well.

I may notice, as a mark of the goodness of the spring, that I had some rye fairly headed out on the 17th of May. It was from some seed that had been amongst some Kentucky seed wheat I got last fall.

Cobourg, May 23, 1860.

MILKING.

The first requisite of a good milker is, of course, the proper disposition. Without this, the rest is worthless. The udder should, therefore, be carefully cleaned before the milking commences. The milker may begin gradually enough, but should steadily increase the rapidity of the operation till the udder is emptied, using a pail sufficiently large to prevent the necessity of stopping to withdraw the milk, which is always very unpleasant. Nor can the milker stop or rise during the process of milking, without leading the cow more or less to withhold her milk. The utmost care should be taken to strip to the last drop, and to do it rapidly, and not in a slow and negligent manner, which is sure to have its effects on the yield of the cow. If any milk is left, it is re-absorbed into the system, or else becomes caked, and diminishes the tendency to secrete a full quantity afterwards. Milking as dry as possible is especially necessary with young cows with their first calf, as the mode of milking, and the length of time to which they can be made to hold out, will have very much to do with their milking qualities as long as they live.

MILKING OFTEN.

I have never practiced milking more than twice a day, because in spring and summer other farm-work was too pressing to allow of it; but there is no doubt that, for some weeks after calving, and in the height of the flow, the cows ought, if possible to be milked regularly three times a day—at early morning, noon, and night. Every practical dairyman knows that cows thus milked give a larger quantity of milk than if milked only twice, though it may not be quite so rich; and it seems reasonable to believe that the tendency to produce the development of the udder and milk veins. A frequent milking stimulates an increased secretion, therefore, and ought never to be neglected in the milk diary, either in the case of young cows or very large milkers, at the height of the flow, which will ordinarily be for two or three months after calving. The charge of this branch of the dairy should generally be entrusted to women. They are more gentle and winning than men. The same person should milk the cow regularly, and put change from one to another, unless there are special reasons for it.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH

Inserted on the latest and most scientific principles, from a single tooth to a whole set, on Gold, Silver, Chloroplastic and Vulcanised Rubber. Particular attention paid to tooth filling, or filling teeth, after the nerve has become exposed.

Mr. O'D. has paid strict attention to the formation and growth of the temporary and permanent teeth, so that it will be to the interest of parents and guardians if they find anything wrong with their children's teeth to consult him without delay in order to prevent the many irregularities to which they are peculiarly subject.

Front Teeth which are too much decayed for a Gold filling, he fills with the Adontoplastic, or Crystal Cement, it saves the teeth a long time and does not cause it to discolour.

All operations warranted to give satisfaction, and at prices corresponding with equally good work elsewhere.

AND upwards saved to the Farmers, by Aldus Mowry's

CHOP GRINDER.

This Machine has been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known or in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 18 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are so fitted into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without altering or adjusting the Machine.

PRICE $60.

All orders directed to "M. Mowry, Ashburnham, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.

The C. W. F. M. & S. Ins. Co. was incorporated by Act of Parliament in the year 1851, solely for the purpose of meeting the wants of the Farmer by affording him protection against fire, at the lowest possible rate.

The Act of Incorporation prohibits the Directors from taking risks on Mills, Stores, or Buildings in Blocks, or any other hazardous property; and by strictly adhering to these principles, by its liberal and prompt settlement of claims, as well as by judicious management throughout, the Company has met with that success and general favor, in the several places where it has operated, which it is still its desire and effort not only to maintain, but to extend to localities not hitherto occupied by it.

The Board of Directors is composed entirely of Farmers, each who know your requirements, whose interest lies with you, and to whose carefully your interests may safely be entrusted.

CHRIST AND HIS APOSTLES.

THE CHEAPEST and most elegant engraving ever published. Dayton & Co.' magnificent engraving of Thorwaldsen's Sacrestatues in the Cathedral at Copenhagen, representing

Christ and His Apostles!

Has been issued but a few weeks, and orders for it are pouring in by every mail. Although the original models sent to this country in 1853, and exhibited at the Chrystal Palace, were destroyed in that building, the SACRED GROUP, depicted in bold relief in a

Splendid Engraving,

Thirty-two inches in length and twenty-four inches in width, copied by permission of the Danish Government from the Copenhagen Statues, still survives, and five scenes of Gospel History are portrayed in the architectural border surrounding the main picture, viz:

John Preaching in the Wilderness.—Jesus Baptized by John—Christ Blessing Little Children—The last Supper—The Three Marys at the Sepulchre.

Altogether this is the greatest triumph of art ever witnessed in this country. The Rev. Dr. Prime, editor of the New York Observer, the editors of the New York Evangelist, Christian Advocate, Examiner, Herald of Truth, Chronicle, etc., speak in enraptured terms of the work, and recommend its introduction into every family in the land.

The proof sheets were sold for $35 each, but with the view of affording every family an opportunity to possess this enchanting and instructive picture, the proprietors offer it and an elegant Bible, bound in Velvet, with gilt-edged leaves and rich clasps and mountings, for $1.25; the 25 cents being for return postage.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARIES Free of Cost!

Sabbath School Libraries and Sabbath School children can produce this GREAT GOSPEL PICTURE upon such terms as will give their school a Library free of Cost. The picture is in large demand among the members of all Christian Churches. Hundreds of Christian parents anxious to encourage their children in well-doing, and to obtain (for the nominal sum of One Dollar) one of the most sublime engravings of modern sculptures, warmly approve of our scheme, and we confidently expect in supplying the religious public with this unequalled scriptural engraving, to be the means of founding a large number of Sunday School Libraries, and of thus subserving in two ways the cause of gospel truth and moral culture.

SABBATH SCHOOL CLUBS can be formed ordering from 25 copies upward, at our regular price of $1 each copy, and we will forward with the engravings a Library (from the American S. S. Union, or any other source) of Two Books for every engraving. Thus, an order for 50 copies, which could be easily raised in most schools would secure 100 Books, and 100 Engravings would secure 200 Books, and so on.

NEW YORK, May 8, 1860.

The beautifully engraved copy of Thorwaldsen's "Christ and His Apostles" is well fitted to adorn the walls of any Christian dwelling or Sabbath School Room, and will suggest valuable religious lessons to both young and old.

STARTLING BUT TRUE
SURVIVE OR PERISH.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

The history of this great remedy is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experience of one nation, but consists of a compilation of testimonials from the sick of every country—a record, the like of which has never been adduced in favour of any discovery or invention since time began.

BILIOUS DISORDERS.

In whatever form disease attacks the liver, it is repulsed and exterminated by this searching, painless and irresistible curative.

Let the sick whom the faculty have abandoned resort with confidence to this antibilious agent, and a restoration to health and activity will be the unvarying result.

DYSPEPSIA.

The great scourge of this continent yields quickly to a course of these antiseptic Pills and the digestive organs are restored to their proper tone: no matter in what hideous shape this hydra of disease exhibits itself, this searching and unerring remedy disperses it from the patient's system.

GENERAL DEBILITY AND WEAKNESS.

From whatever cause, lowness or spirits, and all other signs of a diseased liver, and other disorganization of the system, vanish under the eradicating influence of this all powerful antiseptic and detergent remedy.

SICKLY FEMALES

Should lose no time in trying a few doses of this regulating and renovating remedy; whatever may be their complaint, it can be taken with safety in all periodical and other disorganizations; its effect is all but miraculous.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy known in the world for the following diseases:

Asthma,	Headache,
Bowel Complaints,	Indigestion,
Coughs,	Influenza,
Colds,	Inflammation,
Chest Diseases,	Inward Weakness
Costiveness,	Liver Complaints,
Dysentery,	Lowness of Spirits,
Diarrhœa,	Piles.
Drapsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Debility,	Secondary Symptoms,
Fever and Ague,	Venereal Affections.
Female Complaints,	Worms of all kinds.

☞ CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

 Sold at the Manufactory of Professor Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in pots at 25 cents, 63 cents and $1 each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each pot.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.

CONSOLATION FOR THE SUFFERING.

Nearly fifty years continual use in every part of the habitable globe, amongst the savage and the civilized alike, has proved that simple eruptions, open sores, hard tumors, scrofulous developements of all kinds, abscesses, cancers, old wounds, and, in one word, every species of inflammation and suppuration, whether in the skin, the flesh, the glands, or among the muscles, can be arrested and permanently cured, without danger, by rubbing in and using as a dressing, this inestimable Ointment.

SCROFULA, ERYSIPLAS, AND SALT RHEUM, ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN, PILES, AND FESTULA,

No remedy has ever done so much for the cure of diseases of the Skin, whatever form they may assume, as this Ointment. No sore of Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore Heads, Scrofula or Erysipelas, can long withstand its influence.

BAD LEGS, OLD SORES, ULCERS, &c.

Cases of many years standing that have pertinaciously refused to yield to any other remedy or treatment, have invariably succumbed to a few applications of this powerful ointment.

Arising from a bad state of the blood or else to mis disease, are eradicated, and a clear and transparent surface regained by the restorative action of this Ointment. It surpasses many of the cosmetics and other toilet appliances in its power to dispel rashes and other disfigurements of the face.

Every form and feature of these prevalent and stubborn disorders is eradicated locally and entirely by the use of this emollient; warm fomentations should precede its application. Its healthy qualities will be found to be thorough and invariable.

Both the Ointment and Pills will be used in the following cases:

Bunions,	Skin Diseases,
Burns,	Swelled Glands,
Chapped Hands,	Sore Legs,
Chilblains,	Sore Breasts,
Corns,	Sore Heads
Fistula,	Sore Throats,
Gout,	Sores of all kinds,
Lumbago,	Sprains,
Mercurial Eruptions,	Stiff Joints,
Piles,	Tetter,
Rheumatism,	Ulcers,
Ringworm,	Venereal Sores,
Salt Rheum,	Wounds of all kinds.
Scalds,

☞ CAUTION!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London" are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

ALBION HOTEL,
MONTREAL.
L. W. DECKER, Proprietor.
IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with Business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expense, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to say the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

Poetry.

For the Examiner.

WHEN YET A CHILD.

When quarrelling, from long ago,
The today play seemed I would leave,
And sigh some angry elements skip flew,'
Seated, a cap of green-rush wears.

On it expanding time and skill,
Next it to deck I tassels made
Of king-cup, ferns or daffodil,
And proudly I the same display'd.

Pleased for a while the thing I wore,
Until nothing, it it lost its hue,
Then what had been prized but before,
In negligence I from me threw.

Since then at countless things I've strove,
Much one pursuing in delight;
And as a man, most earnest were
Fancies in tenure gay and bright.

Alas for me!—my boyhood's solemn
Of rush cap joy to fade so fleet,
Longer survived than many a dream
Of mine I sadly could repeat.

While stern remorse as memory wings
Her way to childhood—though she sigh,
As sigh she ill—no tribute brings,
Claimed by contrition to the eye.

And wistfully o'er hopes destroyed
And moaned ills, thought cowering says
"Would that again as child employed
"Rush caps I were, as in those days."

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

The following paraphrase of the Lord's Prayer is the best we have ever seen in the language—there is nothing wanting and nothing redundant:

Our Heavenly Father, hear our prayer;
Thy name be hallowed everywhere;
Thy Kingdom come; Thy perfect will
In earth, as heaven, let all fulfil;
Give this day's bread that we may live,
Forgive our sins as we forgive;
Help us temptation to withstand,
From evil shield us by Thy hand:
Now and forever unto Thee,
The Kingdom, power and glory be.
Amen.

Evening Prayer.

"Our Father."
The mother's voice was low and tender, and solemn.
"Our Father."
On two sweet voices the tone was borne upward. It was the innocence of children that gave them utterance.
"Who art in Heaven."
"Who art in Heaven," repeated the children, one with her eye bent meekly down, and the other looking upwards as if she would penetrate the heavens into which her heart was aspiring.
"Hallowed be Thy name."
Lower fell the voices of the little ones. In a gentle murmur they said,
"Thy kingdom come."
And the burden of the prayer was still taken up by the children.
"Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven," filled the chamber. And the mother continued—
"Give us this day our daily bread."
"Our daily bread," lingered a moment on the air, as the mother's voice was hushed into silence.
"And forgive us our debts as we also forgive our debtors."
"And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil."
"For thine is the kingdom, and the power and the glory, forever and ever.—Amen."
All these holy words were said piteously, and fervently by the little ones, as they knelt with clasped hands beside their mother. Then as their thoughts, uplifted on the wings of prayer to their heavenly Father came back again and reseated on their earthly parents, a warmer love came gushing to their hearts.
Pure kisses—tender kisses, the seal 'good night.' What a sweet agitation pervaded all their feelings. Those two dear heads were placed side by side on the snowy pillows, the mother's last kiss given, and the shadowy curtain drawn.
What a stillness reigns without the chamber. Inwardly, the parent's ears are bent. They have given those innocent ones into the keeping of God's angels, and they can almost hear the rustle of their garments as they gather around their sleeping babes.—A sigh, deep and tremulous, breaks on the air. Quickly the mother turns to the father of her children, with a look of earnest inquiry on her countenance. And he answers them to her silent questions:
"Far back through many years have my thoughts been wandering. At my mother's knee, when I said nightly, my childhood's evening prayer. It was the best and holiest of all prayers, "Our Father," that she taught me. Childhood and my mother passed away. I went forth as a man into the world, strong, confident, and self-seeking. Once I came into great temptation. Had I fallen in that temptation, I should have fallen never to rise again. I was about yielding. All the barriers I could oppose to the bursting flood, seemed ready to give away, when as I sat in my room one evening, there came from an adjoining chamber, now first occupied for many weeks, the murmur of low voices. I listened. At first no articulate sound was heard, and yet something in the tones stirred my heart with new and strong emotions. At length there came to my ears, in the earnest, loving voice of a woman, the words: "Deliver us from evil."
"For an instant it seemed to my soul that voice came right of my mother. Back with a sudden bound, through all the intervening years, went my thoughts, and a child again I was kneeling at my mother's knee.—Humbly and reverently I laid over the mouth of the holy prayer she had taught me, heart and eye lifted up to heaven. The hour and the power of darkness had passed. I was no longer standing in slippery places, with a flood of waters ready to sweep me to destruction, but my feet were on a rock. My pious mother's lore had saved her son. In the holy words she had taught me in childhood was a living power to resist evil through all my after life. Ah! that unknown mother, as she taught her child to repeat this evening prayer, little dreamed she that the holy words were to reach a stranger's ear, and save him through the memory of his own childhood and his own mother. And yet it was so. What a power there is in God's word as it flows into and rests on the minds of innocent childhood."
Tears were in the eyes of the wife and the mother, as she lifted her face and gazed with subdued tender love on the countenance of her husband. Her heart was too full for utterance. A little while she thus gazed, and then with a trembling joy laid her head upon his bosom. Angels were in the chamber where their dear ones slept, and they felt their holy presence.

THE STEAM PRESS.

In the course of his elegant address at the Tract meeting Dr. Fuller said, Who can measure the power of the press? An ounce of lead moulded into a bullet, and put into a Minie rifle, with a few grains of powder will do its errand sufficiently upon a man two miles distant, if it encounter no obstacle; but that ounce of lead made into types and put into one of How's lightning printing presses, will go thousands of miles, and do its errand effectively, not on one man merely, but on millions, and that though oceans, rivers, and mountains may intervene. A steam printing-press! Did you ever go down into one of the spacious vaults under your side-walks, and watch the monsters? I feel like taking off my hat to the huge machine. It seems to me like one of Ezekiel's living creatures, with the hand of a man, and the sound of many waters, and the spirit of the living creature in the wheels.
It asks no nourishment, knows no weariness. How it strips itself to its work, and toils on with a strength that mocks to scorn the might of the giant, and with a clamor as if it would shiver to pieces every substance in its grasp. And yet with a delicacy and precision unattainable by human muscles, it receives a fabric so delicate that a rude touch would rend it, and imprints upon it in the twinkling of an eye that which costs hours to compose. It flings off sheet after sheet to entertain, instruct, regenerate, and bless the earth. None of us have yet begun to appreciate the division of knowledge, whether it be in volumes, pamphlets, or above all through the daily newspaper, that moral institution which has revolutionized not only the literary but the commercial and political world. It would be an unheard of delinquency, did not the church of God employ this mighty agency.

THE NEWSPAPER.

The following is part of an address read by the editor of the Utica (N. Y.) Herald, before the editorial and typographical association, lately held in Buffalo.
The Newspaper to-day commands the best minds and sturdiest hearts of the age. Through it flows the deepest, widest, purest currents of mental life. In it every noblest enterprise finds its sturdiest champion and most faithful ally. Among its contributors are found at once the most gifted and most pure men of the day. Premiers and Members of Parliament; Historians, Novelists and Poets; whoever has achieved the most brilliant fame—whoever has attained the most dizzy heights of glory; is proud to rank himself among its contributors.—Whether it be Gladstone, varying the labors of the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, by writing leaders for the "Saturday Review"—Napoleon the Third stirring his imperial wit in the "Le Moniteur"—Cobden charging at the head of the statistical squadron through the London "Economist"—Edward Everett disputing the palm with the Gun maker of Moscow in Bonner's "Ledger"—Hildreth abandoning the pursuit of historic fame for a subordinate post in the staff of the "Tribune"—each and all pay eloquent tribute to the dignity of Newspaperal labor. From the most disreputable, Journalism has become the most honorable of the professions. To stand at the head of an influential paper; to speak daily to thousands of ears eager to catch the faintest murmur of your voice; to represent in yourself, or what is better, to lead the intelligent public sentiment of the community in which you reside; to be an authority and an oracle with those around you; to feel that the rich harvest of intelligence which smiles on every side, is in some measure, the product of the seed your brain has sown—may well satisfy the most exalted ambition.
Consider, too, the position which the Newspaper holds in society to-day. I do not think I exaggerate when I say it has become the controlling agent in our present civilization. It has illuminated thought, quickened moral perceptions, and caused the mighty River of Life to flow with a healthier current. It has become the leader of public opinion. It moulds the world's thought as the potter moulds the clay.—Mightier than the pulpit—mightier than the forum—mightier than all the agents that lead mankind towards a nobler destiny—the Newspaper asserts all the prerogatives of a moral sovereign. It meddles in everything—it dictates everything—it pronounces judgment upon everything. It sits upon the Judge's bench, pleads at the Bar, marshals the witness box, appears as advocate in every case in which the rights of humanity are involved. It makes and unmakes reputations; launches the thunderbolt of war, or bears the olive-branch of peace; elects Presidents; forms Cabinets; frames Diplomatic notes; settles boundary disputes; excites people to insurrection and drives Despots from their thrones.

For the Examiner.

A TRIP TO LINDSAY.

Mr. Perron,—By notice around for miles about Mud Lake, and in the township of Smith in particular, we were informed that there was to be an excursion of the Sons of Temperance from the township of Smith up the back lakes to Lindsay on the steamer Ogemah. I availed myself of this opportuned occasion to visit this, to me unknown region, and as the day was fine many of the Indians and women from the Indian village were going.
The whole party must have left Bridgenorth nearly about the time specified in the bills, for nearly at 9 o'clock we saw the boat coming up as stately as any steamer ever moved on the bosom of these waters, and its spars lined with flags of different device and manner; and among the many the flag of our country decorating the main mast, and also the colors of the Sons of Temperance, from Smith,—A beautiful thing it was too, the Band played beautifully.
Our waiting assembly were soon on board and off we soon were on the water, moving majestically over a smooth surface, for not a breath of air seemed to stir, and all nature on both sides of the Rivers and chain-like Lakes were in their primeval glory and grandeur. Distant hills and dense forests were on each bank,—The points which shoot out from the main land, the coasy bays fringed with the lily and the wild rose, and away we sped! Over Pigeon Lake with its broad sheet of water—the air so invigorating; and no wonder that every one seemed to be in good humor, for all seemed easy, bordering on careless abandon. The jews-harp band played some of those well known and natioual tunes which are stirring in their nature, and which only a professor could appreciate and enjoy.
But here comes another mode of enjoying one's self on the deck, it was Dancing. The Poetry and power of cat-gut—how wonderful! There they sailed around and around till I could not look any longer, on account of a strange dizziness coming over me. How sensible these country people are, they protect their feet with enough of leather and the misses too as well have no senseless soles to their shoes, nor paper bottomed shoes, but leather, and thick at that, and the natural consequence is they have ruddy cheeks, natural and not painted ones, and there is such elasticity in their walk and spring and an earnestness which betrays the deep language of the heart conveyed from the deep blue eye. No petted, pouty, studied smile, but a hearty laugh. They do the same as the man said he did when he was asked why he laughed when anything was said however trivial, he answered—"why, where I came from" said he "when we laugh we make a business of it." And such people can never be troubled with a "blue devil" for such are double proof. Some people think that it is almost a sin to laugh above a smile. They may grin like a tomb-stone all the days of their lives, but give me a good hearty laugh when the heart is boiling over with a genial humor. I would meet a man with the beam of the sun in his countenance before a morose and dyspeptical visaged individual.
Just before we came to the big "Bob," we came and passed by the "Little Bob," on our left and soon realized the reason why it is called (Bobsregeon)—shallow, rapid current, which might be the literal rendering of it. The island must have been and still no doubt is a promising place. The position it has, makes it so with the surrounding country, and it eventually must thrive. Here Mr. Boyd of your town has his gang-mill, and cuts from 25,000 to 30,000 feet of lumber every day, and some of the very best lumber. Such men ought to be rewarded for the spirit of enterprise they manifest. Houses, piles of lumber, saw and grist mill, and a house with a sign "Travellers Rest." If bad liquor will give the rest they calculate not far wrong, for few drinks would certainly give them rest till the day of judgment; and this reminds me of a story about a New York Merchant in Paris, Illinois, who got up very dry, and being with all rather a coward and particular as to what he might drink, the place had a foreboding look, and after passing over the whole town saw two coffins taken away in a hurry a few doors off "nine heats's hotel" and did not want to ask his landlord for any drink till he saw either him or some one else taking something. Just at this moment a son of the far-famed "Emerald Isle" came in, with a round face and the tail end of a quaint laugh stuck out a little on the left side of his mouth. "Drink sir" said he touching his cap to the landlord—"what is it to be?" "Brandy." "How much." "Two cents sir," and sure enough two cents worth was drank out—a little over half a glass.
The merchant saw the sly faces the men made; and made up his mind he would have to be the next to be measured for a coffin. The landlord seeing his guest having a very dry look, for all the aquatic breed in the human race understand each other, they having a language of their own. "Sir will you imbibe this morning to sharpen your appetite?" "Yes sir, in a few minutes if that man who bought two cents worth and drank it, as I am going around the corner if he is not dead by the time I get back I will take a little too," said the merchant. If we could tell he is sensible as this merchant he would catch many a rich bad.
We soon emerged, again from the narrows into a most beautiful sheet of water—Sturgeon Lake—bending westward, one rounded point on our right covered with trees of the oak, which made it appear like a Park—and farms lay by the side of hills running themselves with heaving grain—the lake was still; but all of a sudden the heavy clouds burst over our heads and such a rain and wind, flashes, mirth, debacles, light and lake drenches, sun shades, flags and blue ribbons, (ladies) cap bats [illegible] fine [illegible] not mind the [illegible] heavy, and alternately it rained till we arrived in Lindsay and never did I see such a rain! And no wonder all the band for miles is drowned bad. If any of your readers ever happened to be in Lindsay when it rained they will understand what large drops of water means. We were about 45 minutes in Lindsay and at 4.30 p.m. we again "let go and haul" and when we left the mouth of the river the big round face of the sun cheered us—mirth began—Dancing music and promenading was the order again—waltzes, walk arounds, jigs, &c. Our Captain seemed to anticipate us in everything, bland and obliging.
Among Bobsregeon, "the Little Bob" we left on our right this time.
The majority of the passengers were called into the cabin and order having been given for a meeting when Wm. Graham, Esq., of Smith was voted to take the chair or take the stand, and he did the latter, and he stated the object of the meeting. When the following Resolutions were presented to the meeting by your humble servant with a "few feeble remarks." Yes they were feeble, but we made up in the cheering.
Resolved,—That the thanks of the excursionists, the Sons of Temperance of Smith Division are due and are hereby tendered to Capt. J. Walace of the steamer Ogemah, for the kind, efficient, and prompt manner in which he has discharged his arduous duties as a Captain, and while we give him our sincere thanks, we would also express the hope that this may not be the last trip we shall ever take in his well conducted boat. —Carried.
Another series of resolutions were passed, one in favor of the "jews harp band," another for the speaker.
I proposed three cheers for our good sovereign mother, the Queen.
Three cheers for the Prince of Wales.
Three cheers for the half drowned ladies—and all received grand and lusty response.
The ducking we received on landing at the Indian village in the mud and water, and that, in the dark, did not even dampen our ardour for the day's happy excursion to Lindsay and back. As there were no accidents to mar our pleasure up till this time it is our hope none happened afterwards.

I am Sir,
Yours, &c.,
G. C——r.

ESSAY
ON THE GENIUS AND POETRY OF TANNAHILL, THE SCOTCH POET.

ROBERT TANNAHILL, the lyric poet of Renfrewshire, was born in Paisley, Scotland, famed for the intelligence of its operative weavers, June, 1774. His parents were poor, but honest and industrious. His father was a muslin weaver, poor, but noted in his day for his intelligence, and the possessor of a library of some hundreds of volumes. Our poet was also a weaver; and with the exception of two years spent in England, he spent his melancholy days in Paisley. During fits of poetic inspiration he wandered alone in the wood of Craigielee, "on the braes of Glenifer," or "among the birks of Stanley's shaw," and there he composed the most beautiful lyrics in the Scottish language. His bosom glowed with patriotism and the love of his fatherland.—His benevolence was unbounded, and his love genuine. He had never breathed the tainted atmosphere of courts. Innocence and the oppressed as him always found a true and genuine friend. "Wallace's Lament" breathes the burning spirit of the agonized patriot, groaning over the ruins of his country. "My poor bleeding country what more can I do," is an exquisite expression, exhibiting the Scottish hero's intense anguish after his sad defeat at Falkirk, by the ruthless invaders of his fatherland. "My dear Highland Laddie," is the tender effusion of a melting maiden's soul reposing at the fate of her lover, who was wiled away from his native glen by his chieftain to be a soldier. If heroes, kings, and statesmen lose but half the natural pangs of the simple maiden, mourning for the loss of her lover, they would prove in their career and restore the soldier back to his weeping friends and home, and make mankind happy, instead of compelling them to murder each other in wicked wars, waged in many cases not for mankind's benefit, but to make serfs of freemen, and to gratify the avarice and ambition of kings. "Gloomy winter's now awa," is one of the most beautiful and classic lyrics in any language. The song of the patriot and lover are happily blended, and its each description of the natural scenery of "Stanley's Shaw," "Glenifer's grey hill," "Glenkilloch's sunny braes," and the "Newton Woods," are unrivalled even by Burns:

"Sweet the crawflow'rs early bell,
Decks Glenifer's dewy dell,
Blooming like thy bonny self.
My young, my artless dearie O," is a poetical expression unmatched for simplicity and beauty, by the best descriptive poets in ancient or modern times. Associations of this description excite to patriotism and the love of home. "Thou bonny wood of Craigielee!" is a most touching lyric, exhibiting a kind, tender heart, that would shelter the most helpless of nature's children from injury within its sacred cord.

"Ance ye rude pathwaying gang,
Who tear the meanings ere they fan,
They'll sing you yet, you a sunny morn;
Then, oh, in pity, let them be,"

is the ne plus ultra of earthly philosophy, the expression of a soul that shrinks with exquisite pity from cruelty to animals. Individuals who are cruel to the brutal tribes are generally tyrants to mankind; and the child who is mischievous, and has natural feelings to a bird, will be kind to his sisters and brothers and love his parents. "Over the Water to Charlie" is one of those beautiful allusions that can never grow old. In whatever place a Scotchman hears it sung; whether on the green banks of the Amazon; the swampy shores of Lake Erie; the wild jungles that skirt the Ganges; or the burning sands of Africa; on the frozen wastes of Iceland; in the tented field; or on the boundless ocean—his soul will remember with emotion the land of his fathers. He will then think he sees the mountain's sun setting behind the "Lofty Benlomond;" his heart will swell with an emotion felt only by the patriot; and his soul melt, and his bosom throb to embrace the friends he has left behind him, and he will long to wander again among the glens and lakes of his native land, as he was wont to do in childhood, when he gathered "blue berries" in his blue bonnet. "The Lass O Arrotteesie" is a matchless song, and will be chaunted by Scotlands' maidens, on the winter evenings, by their cottage hearths, and on the green "knowes" when milking their dairy, so long as the lyrics of Scotia are understood and felt by her simple, but gifted peasantry.
But I need not proceed to enumerate all the beauties of Robert Tannahill, he has no blemishes. He was one of nature's gentlest children, too sensative to encounter the chilling blasts of a genius-neglecting world. Yet vile criticism: the most poisonous that ever ranked in the tooth of a rattle snake, was directed against him: in a moment of insanity he consigned the manuscripts to the flames, by reason of which many a beautiful poetic gem has been lost to the world. He lies buried in the abbey church yard of his native town; no obelisk decorates his grave. But his fame requires no "monument of stone" to perpetuate it in the memory of his countrymen, for it will live coextensive with the love of his countrymen for their native land, and the homes of their childhood.

MARRIAGE OF THE PRINCE OF WALES.

There is a rumour around about the forthcoming matrimonial alliance of the heir apparent to the British throne with a Princess of Prussia. German newspapers solemn always and full of erudition, says that as the particulars of this union have long been determined—arranged, in fact, at the same time of the nuptials of our Princess Royal with young Prince Frederick William of Russia. It was then settled we understand that there should be a "double marriage" between the royal families of Great Britain and Hohenzollern; such double marriage as was seriously contemplated a century ago by the then monarchs of England and Prussia, but unfortunately broken off at the eleventh hour, to the great grief of a certain Crown-Prince Frederick, no less than of his latest British biographer. Indeed, history tell us that German princes have always been very fond of arresting these cross-alliances as we might call them; and that it is owing to the principle which they involve that the whole of European royalty is at the present moment one vast family of brothers and cousins. The Emperor Napoleon is we believe the only monarch on the western world not directly related to the august family; though even he by means of more or less distant consanship, is somewhat drawn towards the mystic circle. With the single exception, if it is such, the whole of the royal houses of Europe form but one family, all the members of whom are blood relations. The stock or root of this family is in Germany—the "fatherland" pre-eminently—and it is there apparently, that a continual desire is felt more and more to unite the branches of the tree, more and more to engraft like on like. The title of courtesy of "Nos frere," by which European sovereigns address each other, is to become ultimately a complete reality.—London Spectator.

STRANGE SCENE IN A BRITISH COLONY.

From the Montreal Witness.

Quebec, 13th June, 1860.

A scene of an unusual description occurred in the Court of Queen's Bench this morning in Quebec. Upon the Court meeting, an oil painting of Pius IX., in a gold frame, was observed in the most conspicuous place in the Court Hall, and within a few feet of the Judges. While one of the members of the Bar was addressing the Court,—then composed of Messrs. Lafontaine, Duval, and Mondelet, three French and [illegible] Judges, and but one Judge of old country extraction and a Protestant, Mr Justice Aylwin,—the whole of the proceedings of the Court were abruptly terminated by Mr Justice Aylwin, who said: "By what authority has that picture been placed there?" Receiving no answer he repeated the interrogatory in energetic language, and receiving no answer again, he said that he would not sit there so long as the picture remained in that place. He accordingly left the bench, and there being no quorum, the whole business of the Court is stopped for the day. It appears the picture was introduced into the Court-house with the permission of the three French Judges. So much for the exclusion of old country people from the Bench.

—The United States Senate have rejected the Bill for the admission of Kansas. The [illegible] vote have added [illegible] to the electoral vote to be given to the [illegible] the Presidency.

—A Frenchman named Labelle was brutally beaten in a billiard saloon the other night because he would not play a game of billiards with the two men who assaulted him. It is feared he will not recover.

THE [illegible] SOLUTION.

Mr. Editor,—Before undertaking the discussion of Mr. Gallbraith on my solution of problem 13, I consider that the solution of problem 13 is correct, and that the solution by me is correct, only that upon the withdrawal to answer the conditions of the problem. I will now show that no part of the answer clashes with the conditions of the problem. First, the increased number of passengers involving the ferryman = 30, and the number that got out without help = five-sixths of 30 = 25, this number took the ferryman according to the conditions of the problem, consequently the number helped out = 30 minus 25 = 5, this also answers the conditions of the problem for the first man was in the under 15 minutes, and the problem asserts that the number helped out = one-third of the number of minutes the last man was in the water = 5, finally the number of passengers on the boat at first not including the ferryman = four-fifths of the increased number of passengers including the ferryman = 24. If Mr. Rothwell will examine the University questions in 2nd volume of Colenso's Algebra, he will see problem 18 and the answer as I have given it. It appears that Mr. R. wishes to twist the problem to suit his own ideas,
And in trying thus his learning to display,
He explained its meaning quite away.

He says "it is useless to tell me that I don't know the thing." I would like to know to what thing he alludes. He continues: "If I had a chance of being understood I should understand it as quickly as most folk." I cannot comprehend what he means by such an illogical and inelegant expression; what connection of cause is there between "If I had a chance of being understood" and "I should understand it as quickly as most folk." He goes on to say "I think I may without boasting say that I have a moderate share of ability if not in writing, at least in arithmetic and mathematics generally. He did well to say "if not in writing," for if his communication on problem 18 be taken as a sample of his composition it is a poor one indeed.

Those who make it their disgraceful aim
To murder genius and slaughter fame,
On talent's brow they use the chaplet heave,
Fain would they snatch it, to weave it round their own,
And build their castle and raise their fame,
Upon the ruin of another's name.
Ah! little then their mortals think
In dignity to rise,
In mute regret lies wisdom's prize,
'Tis folly to be wise.

I have the honor to be, &c.,
E. P. FORD.

Mr. Editor:—The solution of problem 23 I do not consider suits the terms of the problem. The problem may be solved by using plain Nos. just not by plane arithmetic. It cannot be solved but by the knowledge of euclid, lib. 1st, prop. 47.

JAS. STRATTON.

Mr. J. Stratton writes that problem 14, as it appeared in our issue of the 12th April can be solved. He obtains the value of X = 16, and the value of Y = 16.

Mr. Stratton gives the following answer to problem 23:

A's time	2 834-1063	months.
B's time	3 267-1063	"
C's time	3 171-1063	"
D's time	2 754-1063	"

Mr. Thomas Young of Smith, sends an answer to problem 22, which corresponds with the above.

PROBLEM No. 28.

A man borrows as much as he has and spends a shilling; borrows as much as he then has and spends 1s, and so on for 36 times. How much had he at first? Give an arithmetical formula.

PROBLEM 29.

If the earth were forty thousand geographical miles in circumference, what would be the length of a degree of longitude at 45 deg. 45 min. north latitude. Give a general rule for all such problems.

PROBLEM 30.

If the diagonals of a trapezium be 60.17 and 45.17 chains, and their angle of intersection 129 deg. 18 min., what is the area?

PROBLEM 31.

Find a value of X such that X^2 plus X shall be a square.

PROBLEM 32.

Given the sides of a triangle 25, 35 and 40. Required, the radius of the circumscribing circle, by a geometrical investigation.

PROBLEM 33.

A rectangular bowling green having been measured it was observed that if it were 5 feet broader and 6 feet longer, it would contain 116 feet more; but if it were 4 feet broader and 3 feet longer it would contain 113 feet more. Required—the length and breadth.

PROBLEM 34.

A and B each laid out £300 on the purchase of stock; A into the 3 per cents and B into the 4 per cents. The stocks were at such a rate that B received £1 interest more than A. When afterwards each of the stocks rose 10 per cent, they sold out and A received £ 10 more than B. Required the price at which each of the stocks were purchased.

PROBLEM 35.

Supposing a water-wheel 12 feet in diameter, with 12 feet length of buckets, placed in a stream of 8 inches deep and 1 foot of fall, what would be the power of the wheel?

THE GALLO-RUSSIAN ALLIANCE.

From the London Press.

The intelligence from St. Petersburg announces that the relations between Prince Gortschakoff and the French Minister are more friendly than ever, and appears to indicate that the France-Russian alliance is matured. Both powers, doubtless congratulate themselves upon this result, but one of them at least will contemplate the future of his ally with a sardonic smile.

The alliance between Russia and France cannot last long. The late Czar was right in judging that England was his more natural ally; and although a high morality forbade our becoming in 1853 a participant in the Muscovite plan for dismembering Turkey, the present Czar will find that in accepting the forgiveness and responding to the overtures of the French Government he is leaning upon a reed that will pierce his hand, Napoleon well knows the colossal power and imperial panoply of Russia, and has no desire to increase her strength.—Each of the two Powers co-operates with the other for its own ends; but does not Russia see that hitherto it is France alone that is realising her ambition, while the Muscovite plans are still relegated to the future? By means of the Russian alliance, Napoleon was able to intervene in Italy, and appear in the character alike of a military conqueror and of a national liberator. By the countenance of Russia he was able to seize Nice and Savoy, and destroy the barriers of neutrality which protected Switzerland and Italy. Strong in the same alliance, he now spreads discord throughout Germany and down to Prussia in Belgium, and hastens to acquire the frontier of the Rhine. If he once obtain that object, Russia will find him become lukewarm in the alliance, and not unwilling to enter into new combinations by which Russia may be baffled of her prey. In any case, we believe the curtain will not drop upon this grand drama until Napoleon representing the popular principle, will lead the forces of Western Europe onto stand against the semi-oriental absolutism of Russia. Death or circumstance may unexpectedly cut short the career of the Nephew as it terminated that of the Uncle; but we warn Russia that if the Imperial Democrat be successful, she will yet be the object of one of his very deadliest blows. While the Court of St. Petersburg is patiently hoping for the prize at Constantinople, Napoleon is rapidly gathering in his harvest;—while Russia sleeps at the Bosphorus, he will seize the Rhine;—and how will the case stand afterwards?—The great influence which Russia used to possess in Germany has been changed into antipathy by her alliance with France; and when through this alliance the Fatherland shall have been thrown into turmoil and humiliated by Saxony, the hatred of the German race towards Russia will be intense. And if Napoleon, in his usual style, then adroitly make friends with the Germans at the expense of his ally, and direct their wrath against Russia, the Muscovite Colossus likely to cross unharmed out of such a contest? Will not Germany, robbed of her Rhine provinces, extort her wrongs upon Prussia by seeking to strip her of Poland and erect on its ruins of Warsaw as a bulwark against the Czars? And will not the French Emperor be the very first to suggest such a revenge? When lamenting, in his Idees, over so many of his Uncle's projects, the present Emperor expressed at once a longing desire and a high assurance that, despite all the efforts of Russia, the resurrection of the Polish nationality would yet take place. "Poland," he said, "that sister of France, always so devoted, always so magnanimous, may hope for a not distant resurrection; the creation of the duchy of Warsaw by the Emperor ought to serve as the nucleus of a complete nationality."

The Czar Alexander will do well to ponder these words, and to remember that, even if they had never been written, or had not been republished as the Emperor's works, the sense to which they point would still have been one of those "ideas" which Napoleon seeks to accomplish and for which he will readily draw the sword. The Czar Paul became an ally of France in his madness, and was strangled. Alexander I., fascinated by Napoleon I., made a similar mistake, and, after losing Moscow burnt, had to capture Paris. Again the dreams of ambition obscure the judgment of the Czars, with the nephew of the first Napoleon.

When her enemies are allying themselves, and storms are gathering in the horizon of Europe, what is the position of England? She is being pressed hard by both factions and each time she recedes before the action of her Imperial neighbor, she says, "it is too small an affair to go to war about." This is precisely what Napoleon desires—it is to obtain the result that he so sparingly negotiates his pressure. He is not ready for open war with England. He cannot rush into a contest with the Land of Freedom while a parliamentary war is possible in Italy, which, if supported by England, might extend to his own subjects; neither does he think that the flaw are sufficiently loosened which connect us with the German Powers. It suffices him at present to exhibit England as constantly compelled to give way to his will. He seeks to humiliate before his attempts to destroy her. He seeks to persuade the other States that England has neither the spirit nor the power to help them, and that their true course is to ally themselves with France. The coalition is at work, but it is no longer England that is the leader of it. She begs herself in her neutrality, and does nothing.—She forgets that the logs of allies is a bad security for peace, and that neutrality is simply an opportunity for her enemies to choose their own time for attacking her.

FRENCH POLICY.

From the London Times.

That is neither short nor reasonable than always. No Government and no people at that moment, and that is why we have 1,200,000 men from all the world but to offer it at its word. The Moniteur has been authorised to rebuke the Times without betrayed by all the Government Journals, Ministerial and Opposition alike. The Times has not done so, and it is quite clear that it has not done so. It has not done so, and it is quite clear that it has not done so. LATEST from EUROPE.

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Lords, on the 8th inst. Lord Teynham moved a series of resolutions virtually endorsing the doctrine of universal suffrage; but the proposition was rejected, and negatived without a division.

In the House of Commons, on the same evening, the Reform Bill again came up for consideration.

Ineffectual attempts were made to learn from Lord John Russell whether, in the event of a dissolution of Parliament following the passing of the Bill, another dissolution would take place on the passing of the Irish and Scotch measures.

Sir James Fergusson moved the adjournment of the debate, and was supported by various members of the Opposition, who evinced a determination to carry out their design of shelving off the measure for this session.

Lord Palmerston and other members spoke in denunciation of the obstructive policy pursued by the Opposition, and challenged them to meet the question in a bold and open manner.

Mr. Disraeli defended the course of his party, and threw all the blame for delay on the Government and its supporters.

The House divided on the motion for the adjournment of the debate—the result being: For the adjournment, 248; against it, 269. Majority for Government, 21.

A motion for the adjournment of the House was then made and rejected by a Government majority of 45.

Subsequently another motion was made to adjourn the debate, when Lord Palmerston gave way, and named the 11th for the resumption of the debate.

In the House of Lords on the 8th, Lord Brougham, in making some enquiries of Government, relative to the bombardment of Palermo, characterized that proceeding as more atrocious than anything that was ever perpetrated by Nero.

In the House of Commons, Mr. Somes drew attention to the fact of an American ship having been chartered at Calcutta to convey troops to China, while eligible British ships were tendered for the same service.

Mr. Cane called attention to the message of President Buchanan of the 18th ult., relative to the slave trade, and asked for information on the subject.

Lord John Russell said it was unfortunately true that the slave trade prevailed extensively at Cuba, partly on account of the difficulty of searching vessels bearing the American flag, and partly from the defects of American law, with respect to vessels fitted out for the trade. He said the British Government had proposed to the United States that they should act jointly, so that one vessel-of-war might deal with vessels hoisting the American flag and the other with those fitted out as slavers.

The position of the ministry with regard to the Reform bill was considered very embarrassing, and there were rumors of probable resignations in the Cabinet. It was asserted that the rejection or postponement of the measure would lead to the secession of Lord John Russell and Mr. Gladstone.

The London Times says that the struggle on the bill is only as to which party shall bear the odium of its death.

A letter from Mr. Cobden to his constituents touching the action of the House of Lords in rejecting the bill repealing the paper duty, is published. Mr. Cobden deprecates the proceeding of it, as it would thereby be established as a precedent and be repeated with a future budget.

Meetings to protest against the course taken by the House of Lords were being held in various places, and at one in the City of London a letter was read from Lord John Russell concurring in the object of the meeting.

An American firm is said to have offered to hire the Great Eastern for one month's exhibition in New York, on terms which would have insured the Company a dividend of 5 per cent or upward. The offer was declined.

Queen Victoria, attended by a numerous retinue, visited Ascot Races as usual on the "Cup day." The race for the cup was won by Rupee, and Butterfly, the winner of the Oaks, was second, being beaten by a head only.

The Government Expedition, under command of Captain McClintock, having orders only to survey the proposed deep-sea line of route for the North Atlantic Telegraph, it had been determined by the promoters of the enterprise to despatch a private expedition in the late Arctic cruiser Fox, under the command of Captain Allen Young, to survey the overland route as well as northern shores, and to determine the most suitable points for landing the cable, as well as the best locality for a terminus in the North of Scotland. The Fox was expected to be ready to sail about the 1st of July.

THE "GREAT EASTERN."—It is understood that the day of sailing of the Great Eastern will not be advertised until after the trial trip which is to take place on Saturday. Her paddles were tried on Monday last, and her paddles and screws together on Tuesday, and the run of Saturday will consist of twelve hours full steaming down the Channel. The New York pilot has arrived, and is on board. The day of sailing is not intended to be later than the 23rd, and will probably be earlier, as it is desired that the vessel shall be at her New York mooring in full time for the celebration of the 4th July.

811 Mormons left Liverpool in the William Tapscott, a few days ago, en route for the Great Salt Lake. 22 of them were Scotch.

More than $125,000,000 have been paid on account Tea, since it was re-set the Duty by the late Sir Robert Peel.

FRANCE.

It is stated that immediately after the formal acquisition of Savoy and Nice, Prince will address a note to the European Powers setting forth the facts, and demanding their acquiescence in the annexation by France.

The French Government had requested the Madrid Cabinet to open negotiations with the object of concluding a commercial treaty.

The health of Prince Jerome Bonaparte had so far improved that an invalided leave being granted.

Mrs. Fitzherbert and her daughters, accompanied by Mr. Fitzherbert, the American Minister, had been presented to the Emperor and Empress.

The recent storms are said to have considerably damaged the growing wheat crop.

The York Harvest was very dull, and on the 24th closed at 69s6d.

SPAIN.

Senor Bonfill is appointed Minister of Finance and Public Works in place of Senor Salaverria, who retires to the Cabinet without office.

Advices from Madrid to the 29th ult. announce that the Queen had returned to the Escurial. Public tranquillity continued undisturbed, and no disposition to stop payment on the part of the Government was manifested. Bonds were still quoted at 11 per cent discount.

PRUSSIA.

Rumours were current of an intended visit by the Regent to the Rhenish frontiers, and a probable interview there with the Emperor Napoleon.

The Insurrection in Italy.

Late dispatches from Palermo report no change in the position of affairs. The capitulation had been signed, and nothing positive was known as to the armistice. According to some dispatches it was prolonged indefinitely, while others state that it was to terminate on the 7th or 12th instant. Garibaldi had constituted a Ministry, and had appointed a Governor of Palermo and of the Province. He had likewise ordered an extraordinary levy, and had issued many decrees for energetically carrying on the war. One of Garibaldi's proclamations threatens with heavy punishments those who should commit thefts or assassinations. A Paris telegram says that it was believed that hostilities would not be resumed at Palermo. The authorities were engaged in divining the means for preventing the further effusion of blood. It was on the 30th of May that Garibaldi went on board the Hannibal, British man-of-war, to meet the Neapolitan delegate charged to demand an armistice. The conditions were:

1st. The retention of their respective positions by both parties.

2nd. Liberty to attend the wounded, and to remove them on board the fleet.

3rd. Permission to supply provisions to the hospital for the poor.

4th. That the Municipality should address to the Royal Commissioner a petition for the concession of such reforms, and institutions as might be necessary for the country.

The first three points were consented to by Garibaldi without difficulty, but he peremptorily rejected the fourth, and the conference was broken off. Nevertheless, hostilities did not commence on the following day, and the armistice which was fixed to terminate on that day, was still under discussion.

Full and graphic details of the early proceedings of Garibaldi are published in the London Times, and that journal deduces from them that the present month will witness the final overthrow of the Bourbon authority in Sicily.

Letters from Turin assert that the Sardinian Government will have to support Garibaldi, and therefore go to war with Naples, or it will have to put down an insurrection at Home, so excited is public opinion becoming in Piedmont. It was reported that, as a kind of half-measure, Cavour was about to send a Commissioner Extraordinary to Sicily. Orders had also been given to prepare for sea all the men-of-war at Genoa and Spezzia.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Chronicle says that, according to one account, the Emperor, in response to the letter of the King of Naples demanded his interference, has required a detailed account of the reforms which the King of Naples may be disposed to accord his subjects, as a preliminary to his making any more in the matter.

According to another account, his Imperial Majesty has intimated that he could not allow his Government to take any step without first consulting with his allies, particularly including the King of Piedmont.

LATER.—A Genoa telegram, of the 8th, says that news had been received there from Sicily to the effect that the capitulation had been concluded between Garibaldi and General Lanza, but the conditions were not known.

It was reported at Paris that twelve transports had left Naples in tow of steamers to embark the garrison of Palermo.

It was stated that the French Government was about to increase its squadron on the Neapolitan station, in order that all French subjects residing in Naples might be taken on board.

AFTER THE BATTLE.

The King has wept; the young Queen, who accuses the Dowager Queen of all these misfortunes, advises him to make every possible concession, amnesty, constitution, &c. A ministry, Manna Salvarese, is talked of, and of other liberals of the same stamp. There is much and deep movement observable among the middle classes, who beg us to raise their heads. The police tremble, and well they may do so. Yesterday a demonstration took place in our Toledo street—Viva to Victor Emanuel and Garibaldi. The military force interfered and some arrests took place during the night. A price has been put on Garibaldi's head, the Italian Washington! 30,000 ducats —$6,000.

ARRIVAL OF THE MELITA

Quebec, June 25.

By the capitulation signed at Palermo on the 6th of June, the Neapolitan troops were to be allowed to embark with their arms and baggage, and to encamp till their embarkation in the Montepelegrino. Fort Castellamare was to be placed in the keeping of the British Admiral till the evacuation was effected.

A Turin despatch says that England is temporally to occupy the forts at Palermo for reasons unknown. This clause, however, has not yet been put in circulation.—It is stated that the Neapolitan General had decided on concentrating all his military forces at Syracuse and Messina, because by preserving these strong positions he still hopes to appear in the eyes of Europe as master of Sicily. The damage done by the bombardment of Palermo is immense. The Treasury is destroyed. The Neapolitans committed great atrocities. 300 houses were burned by them in only one quarter of the town, as well as several convents. At the moment of retreat, the women and children who sought to escape from the burning houses were killed. The Carini palace was sacked and burned. As they retreated the soldiers set fire to all their way.

Catania was given up to pillage by the royalists, and then abandoned.

Garibaldi issued a decree calling all Sicilians to arms, from 17 or 50 years of age.

There are 50 vessels of war in the roads of Palermo.

The Opinione Nationale gives the rumour that the French, with the consent of Piedmont, have accepted the mediation proposed by Naples.

It is said Mr. Grant had embarked for Sicily. The Sardinian Government had ordered their fleet and all authorities along the coast to apprehend him if possible.

The Neapolitan Envoy was on his way to Paris and London.

Count Aprile, sent to the King of Naples, was strongly urging the adoption of an Italian policy, and liberal constitution for Naples.

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Commons, Lord John Russell explained that on there was little prospect of the Reform Bill being passed this session, Government ought to prevent further waste of time, and he had reluctantly to withdraw it, and proceeded to bring forward a new bill early next session.

Mr. Disraeli congratulated the government on the withdrawal of the bill.

Mr. Bright could not blame the Ministers for the course they had taken; he trusted that the public would firmly declare what is expected before next session, and that what was promised by them would be received in a favor manner by the House.

On the 12th, in the House of Commons, Lord Palmerston stated, in order to afford protection to persons claiming it, that the Admiralty had been directed to station ships of war at Messina, another at Marsala, and another at Palermo, and four in the bay of Naples.

It was announced that the Great Eastern would sail on the 16th. She started on her trial trip on the 9th, running twelve hours out to sea, and twelve back. The trial was regarded as satisfactory. Although the rate attained only averaged 12½ knots, the very foul state of the vessel's bottom, and the fact that her trim was anything but favorable for speed, accounted in a measure for the diminution from the rate attained last year. There was some difficulty in getting up the full amount of steam the revolutions of the paddles and screw never exceeding 10½ and 39 respectively. The ship answered the helm with marvellous ease and rapidity.

FRANCE.

The Emperor would leave Paris on the 15th for Baden, to meet the Prince Regent of Prussia and other German sovereigns.

On the 14th the Emperor was to hold a grand military review to celebrate the annexation of Savoy and Nice.

The Courier de Paris has received a first warning for articles upon the liberty of coalition by working men, and asserting that trade never was more dull in Paris and the Provinces than at present.

The accounts of the growing crops are unfavorable, causing a further rise in breadstuffs. Bourse animated.

ITALY.

The Sardinian Senate approved of the treaty ceding Savoy and Nice—92 to 10.

Evacuation of Italy by French troops is completed.

The financial condition of the Papal Government is very unsatisfactory. The official decree extends the time for closing the subscription to the new loan till the 15th of July.

AUSTRALIA.

The Melbourne correspondent of the Times reported that not only was trade more depressed than at any earlier period of the year, but that the lowest rate of depression had not yet been realized.

The Melbourne Herald takes a more cheerful view. At Sidney business had been much depressed, and considerable failures had taken place. More confidence, however, prevailed at the close.

At New Zealand serious collisions had taken place between the natives and the British troops. At the Teoranka settlement, several engagements with loss of life, particularly on the side of the natives, had taken place.

The May mails from various parts on the west coast of Africa had reached England. No news of importance.

The French fleet had threatened to bombard the town of Bonny, unless a debt of long standing to France was paid.

LATEST.

Londonderry, June 14.

The Great Eastern, on her return voyage, will make Milford Haven, a port of call.

It is understood that Garibaldi will not undertake anything in Sicily for some days. He is organizing his reserves.

The Post says that there is no truth in the rumour that France is about to send a corps of observation to the Swiss frontier.

The Times says that the Government will propose to commence the fortifications and other works immediately, and the Commissioners have pointed out how they may be made available in three or four months for defence even while far short of completion. It is intended to raise money by terminable annuities, that the whole may be absorbed in 25 years. The Times adds that our past expenditure is enormous. We must escape in one way or another. Simply to disband and disarm might inspire contempt, and provoke aggression. A gratuitous war is at best a dangerous speculation. The fortifications may enable a moderate army and navy to do the work of much larger forces, and may enable us to rest from our labors and recruit our finances.

GAVAZZI IN ITALY.

The following is from the Florence correspondent of the N.Y. Times:

"One of the best evidences of the altered condition of things here, in the fact that we have such a man as Gavazzi in Florence preaching against the abuses of the Romish Church, and the temporal power of the Pope. Language or denunciation, such as would cause the eloquent and fearless man to be mobbed out of Montreal, or Dublin, or other cities in half Protestant countries, is here listened to by crowds of Italians, and rapturously applauded. It would seem his Holiness had in his own household some of the strongest opponents, not only of his rule, but of his whole system. As I approached the palace of the Pitti family, on the evening of my first visit to the place where the meeting was held, and heard the clear voice of Gavazzi ringing out into the thronged street, through the open windows, I would hardly believe that it was an Italian city. Every word could be heard so distinctly outside as in, and the hearers were loud and universal. One of the rooms in the vast Pitti Palace is the place where the meetings are held, but is not sufficiently large to accommodate the number of those who wish to hear Ruma condemned. A great many young men are among the audience, and all, apparently, of the more intelligent part of the population. At first the Government hardly thought it prudent to allow Gavazzi to preach such a public manner; but as Rome is showing herself so unresponsive to her mode of attacking the present order of things, it was considered she ought not to be spared. Any one who has heard Gavazzi's finest and intense eloquence, even when burdened and impeded by the difficulties of another language, can imagine what an effective power it must have when clothed in the glowing phrases of his native tongue."

INTERESTING NARRATIVE.

From the Times' Special Correspondent.

Paternoro, May 27.

It is 3 p.m., and I am writing in pen with the handcuffs flying about my hand through the cell. Within the hearing of Garibaldi I produced the first fit of temper at Marsala, the youthful Napoleon used to the brave Sardinians, and to the King of Piedmont the order to bombard his faithful Palermitans, and reduce their town to ashes if they should dare to rise against his paternal authority. The Palermitans have been treated once already in this paternal manner by the illustrious father of the present Sovereign, who as you remember, figures in history as King Bomba for having given these souvenirs of his love to every large town of his kingdom. Whoever has been in a town which is bombarded will tell you that it is very unpleasant, especially if you have not got the means of answering in a combined manner, and yet Palermo has risen this morning. Yesterday an official bulletin of the Government announced to the Palermitans that Garibaldi's defeated bands were flying in the direction of Carlagone, followed by the victorious troops of the King; that the bands which had joined him in Sicily were going home gradually and tranquilly; and that in a short time all would be over. This morning at daybreak Garibaldi appeared at the eastern gates of Palermo, and after a comparatively boldless struggle entered them. By 10 a. m. the greater part of the town was in his hands. The Neapolitans were driven into a number of strong positions round the Royal Palace, to the south-west of the town, and to the north-west towards the Mole, their line of retreat, and, not being able to do anything more, the ships have opened their fire always the last remedy. Almost all the civilized nations have representatives of their fleet on the spot to witness and approve by their presence this noble proceeding—English, French, American, Sardinian, Austrian, none of them are wanting, nay, they have been kind enough to anchor in a way which may not hinder the movements of the brave Neapolitan fleet. It was, indeed, reported yesterday afternoon in the camp of Garibaldi that the British Admiral had protested against such a contingency. The shells which are rushing through the air in every direction clearly prove one of two things—either that the Admiral did not protest, or that the Neapolitans did not listen to his protest. The first is the more probable, for, the loving message of King Bomba II. reached his faithful Lanza, who had been here twelve years ago, the message was communicated to all the Consuls who invited all their subjects to take refuge on board the men of war of their country, and ever since the 22nd ultimo this was carried into effect. Unless, therefore, fresh instructions have arrived, the protest cannot be true.

—A woman in Buffalo has sued for a divorce because her husband beat her for not wanting to attend the same church that he does.

—A party of males and females have been arrested in Portsmouth, O., for walking the streets—the males in female attire, hoops and all—and the females with breeches on.

—The bay harvest has commenced in the neighbourhood of Galt and gives promise of an excellent crop.

—A boy, twelve years of age, was killed in Flint's saw mill, Belleville, on Wednesday, by coming in contact with a revolving shaft. He was twisted round at a fearful velocity, and when rescued it was found six of his ribs were broken, all the joints of his limbs dislocated. He survived about two hours.

—A strange circumstance has just occured at Sardinia. A servant girl of Mr. Simpson, barrister, was on a visit at the house of Mrs. Earl, and wishing to get some of her clothes from Mr. Simpson's house called thither at night, accompanied by a young man named Clarke. On arriving at Mr. Simpson's, they found the house shut up, and thinking the family were gone on a visit, the girl lifted up a window to make an entrance, while Clarke held it from falling. The noise awoke Mr. Simpson, who thinking he was beset by thieves fired a pistol, which took effect in the breast of Clarke and lodged in his back, making a circuit of the body under the skin. He was not seriously injured and is recovering. Mr. Simpson will pay the young man for his time as long as he is unable to work in consequence of the wound.

"He remembered the Forgotten" was beautifully said of Howard the philanthropist. It also applies to every man who brings the ameliorations, comforts and enjoyments of life within the reach of persons and classes who are otherwise deprived of their advantages. Especially may it be said of him who laboriously seeks and finds new means of preserving health. "the poor man's capital, and the rich man's power." We think this eulogium properly applied to J. C. Ayer of Lowell, the renowned chemist of New England, who, spurning the trodden paths to fame, devotes his entire abilities and acquirements to the discovery of Nature's most effectual remedies for disease. When the hidden blessing has been revealed, he proceeds to supply it to all mankind alike, through our druggists, at such LOW prices that poor and rich may alike enjoy its benefits.—Journal & Enquirer, Portland, Maine.

A handsome present for a Lady or Gentleman.

Of the specified retail value of from $3 to $5.

Ten Thousand Orders

For this splendid picture have already been received, and we expect to sell within the present year 100,000 Copies. Titian's Reclining Venus is immeasurably superior in beauty and delicacy of finish, and all the attributes of womanly grace and loveliness, to any other picture of the Goddess, ancient or modern, and this fascinating engraving is pronounced by those who have seen the

VENUS of the DRESDEN Gallery,

a WONDERFUL Copy. There is nothing spurious, paltry or pretentious in the picture.—It is simply, to use the words of Shakespeare, in Richard III. the "DIVINE PERFECTION OF A WOMAN." "Such a flesh," says a distinguished artist "I never saw before in an Engraving; it might have come from the palette of Titian himself, it is so real, so warm, so transparent." A liberal discount to agents and the trade. All country orders for the picture must enclose $3.25—the two dollars being for the Venus, and the twenty-five cents for postage on the same and on the accompanying present.—Address

THE TIME TO CUT GRAIN AND GRASS.

This is an important matter, and one that has not received sufficient attention. Farmers are in the habit of cutting their grain and grass at the most convenient time, and without any reference as to what effect such cutting will have upon the vigour and nutritive qualities of the crop. They will continue to do so, because they have not heretofore thought or investigation upon the subject, and therefore do not realize the losses which they incur by neglecting the harvest grains and grasses at the proper time. The reasons of this loss are so plainly set forth by Mr. Anderson, the learned editor of the Farmers' Journal, published at Montreal, that we prefer to employ them, to using word of our own. He says that "Grass while green, contains a large amount of starch, gum, and sugar. The sugar is perceived in the sweetish taste of the juice: the starch and gum being nearly tasteless are not so readily perceived. The principal nourishing ingredients in all kind of food are starch, gum, sugar, and some nitrogenous compound. But the starch, gum and sugar are mainly changed into hard indigestible woody fibre when grass fully matured. If the ripening process be arrested eight or ten days before its completion, and the plant be dried rapidly doubtless double the amount of starch, gum and sugar will be secured. The same reasoning holds true of all grain. Everyone is familiar with the sweet taste of green corn, wheat in the milk, &c. What the growth is complete and these sugar and gum are a considerable amount of rich nutriment, which would otherwise be changed to the woody fibre of the color stalk. The only point to be looked to is, to let wait until the accumulation of juices is complete, and then begin the harvesting at once. The only exception to this rule is with crops designed solely for seed; these may well be left to the natural full ripening upon the stock, especially when the seed is to be kept long.

The proper time for cutting grasses is at the moment the seed is set, or immediately after the flowering is over. Clover should be cut as soon as in full bloom.

A large number of experiments on wheat and other grains indicate that the proper time for harvesting is when the kernel is fully formed, but still soft enough to yield upon moderate pressure between the thumb nails. This is usually ten days before maturity."

This reasoning is undoubtedly correct, not only her use it is founded on true scientific principles, but also because it is confirmed in an abundance of experience by those who have practiced it. It would be well indeed, if the millions of dollars could be saved to the country annually, if this single item of business of the farm were carefully investigated, and such a practice adopted as the investigation would certainly suggest.

The want of a more accurate knowledge of the business in which he is engaged, of a clearer insight into matters which he cannot comprehend at a glance, is one leading reason why the profits of the farmer do not meet continually meet his expectations. It certainly is not because there is any inherent defect in our soil or climate, or that nature is not generous, even lavish in her favours, but rather that the farmer does not closely observe the waste of the soil, the influence of climate and the effects of doing this and gathering crops, or doing many other things at a wrong time, or in an improper manner. He must become a thinker, as well as a worker, before the profession to which he is engaged will keep pace with the progress of other arts, or afford him that material aid and comfort which its fancies other occupations confer.

In the coming harvest there will be opportunity for every farmer to test the value of these remarks, by cutting a portion of his grain at that moment when the kernel is fully formed, but so soft that when he presses it between his thumb nails, he can squeeze it to a pulp, and notice a slight milky juice in the mashed mass. Then leave a portion ten or twelve days later, and upon threshing up carefully, compare the results. If this course were adopted by one or two intelligent farmers in every neighborhood, and reported to the agricultural papers, it would do much to settle the question and introduce a uniform practice.

To test the value of hay cut early with that cut later, may be a more difficult matter—but still, by weighing portions of the two kinds, and by a critical observation of the manner in which the cattle eat them, and their apparent effects, something may be learned that will be valuable. A pretty fair test would be to lay equal portions of each kind of hay, side by side, in front of the stanchions before the cattle are tied up and on bringing them to their places, observe whether they make a selection. It would be necessary probably to try this more than once, and if the preferences of the cattle were uniform upon one kind of the hay, we should feel tolerably safe to being guided in our practice by their instincts.

We hope experiments will be made and reports sent us that may be published for the benefit of all.—New England Farmer.

AN AMENDMENT BILL.

The Conference Committee of the two branches of Congress have finally and unanimously reached a compromise. They have compromised upon a Bill which fixes the ratio of land distribution between the States, and that one half of all the Government land that has not been reserved for public subscription; the odd numbered sections, to the several States in which they may be situated, Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin, and the Territory of Oregon. The even numbers, and all the highest land sales for five years, and allows them to purchase the land at half price, namely, $1¼ cents per acre." This is the result of three Committees of Conference, and of twelve meetings, and all that could be extracted from the House.

$100 A YEAR

AND five cents saved to the Farmers, by Aldus Mowry's

CHOP GRINDER.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known or in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 10 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are so fitted into the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without altering or adjusting the Machine.

PRICE $60.

All orders directed to "A. Mowry, Ashburnham, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.

The C. W. F. M. & S. Ins. Co. was incorporated by Act of Parliament in the year 1851, solely for the purpose of meeting the wants of the Farmer by affording him protection against fire, at the lowest possible rate.

The Act of Incorporation prohibits the Directors from taking risks on any other business purposes; and by strictly adhering to these principles, by the liberal and prompt settlement of claims, as well as by judicious management throughout, the Company has met with the success and general favor, in the several districts where it has operated, which it is still to deserve and which has enabled it to extend its business and influence throughout Canada.

The Board of Directors is composed entirely of Farmers, men who know your requirements, whose sympathies are with you, and in whose custody your interests may safely be entrusted.

L. W. BECKER, Proprietor.

IS pleasantly situated at the head of ST. PAUL STREET, amongst the largest wholesale houses in the city. It has (with business men generally, and especially with the best Merchants of both Provinces) become so great a favorite, that it is now acknowledged to be THE Business Hotel of Montreal. To meet the extensive increase, during the last year in the business of the house, the proprietor has built a large addition. The Dining Room has been extended and made more commodious; there have been completed in the new wing, a great number of well-ventilated sleeping rooms, and the House throughout has been refitted, and now contains many improvements and conveniences hitherto unknown to its guests. The whole of the beds have, at a great expence, been furnished with NEW SPRING MATTRASSES. The Proprietor expects that by continuing his personal management of the concern, THE ALBION to any the least of it, will continue to be, as it now is, the best Dollar and a half Hotel in Canada.

THE ARTISAN.

Ho, toilers in the quarry!
Ho, delvers in the mine!
Not brighter beams the glory,
In the light of truth benign,
Of proudest laurel shading
The noblest artist's brow,
Than the thorny crown of labor
Your swarthy foreheads know!

What though fame's gilded column,
Amid its vain parade,
Forget its firm foundation,
Your brawny arms have laid:
For all your humble efforts
Ye have in calm content
A recompense far richer
Than the highest praise hath lent.

Not yours, indeed, "the vision,
The faculty divine,"
To pierce the veil of nature,
And bid in beauty shine,
From out their sleep chaotic,
Those forms whose wondrous grace
Almost Heaven's power defying,
Demand in life a place.

But bear ye yet in patience
The burden of your ways—
To you the Great Hereafter
In treasures shall display;
Supernal beauty, hidden
From e'en a Raphael's ken,
To your ecstatic spirits
Shall be unfolded then.

ANNA G. HALE.

Two Hundred Years Ago.

I.—THE LEGEND OF THE JOCELYN HOUSE.

On the 17th of August, in the year 1655, the morning sun rising obliquely on the gables and roof-tops of Portsmouth, lighted up one of those strange spectacles not unusual in New England at that period.

A woman was to be burned for witchcraft.

Goodwife Walforde, who lived with her son Reuben, in a lonely, broken down cottage, on the skirts of the village, had been seen at various times, in divers places, to wring her hands and cry aloud, without any perceptible cause. The witchcraft superstition was then spreading like a pestilence over the country. Several persons possessed of devils, or cursed with unnatural or ungodly powers, had been executed at Salem; and as the woman Walforde had the doubtful reputation of telling fortunes, the cry of witchery flew like wildfire from mouth to mouth, and a thousand vagaries, sometimes coined out of nothing perhaps, passed current as truth. One woman declared that she had repeatedly seen Goodwife Walforde flying on a broom-stick over Piscataqua river in the mist; another had caught her talking to six brindled cats in a wood; and more than one had observed a peculiar maroon-colored smoke issuing from her nostrils.—So of course she was a witch.

The executive authorities took fire at these stories, the truth of which I do not doubt, and the old crone was brought before the Court of Assistants, and condemned to be publicly burnt, "according to ye righteous decision of ye Elders of ye church —all God-fearing men."

Just as the sun fell across the spire of the humble church, a bell commenced tolling with mournful dissonance; and groups of men and women, from different streets, moved thoughtfully toward the Court House, in front of which was an iron stake drive firmly into the ground. The crowd here assembled was composed of dismal-looking men with long pointed beards and sugar loaf hats; old men who seemed like children: and not a few of the gentler sex, arrayed in the voluminous gray hoods which, at that period, were worn by the lower classes.—Here and there, standing aloof from the common herd, were knots of the more wealthy and influential citizens with sombre impenetrable countenance. No one spoke save in half whispers, and a hum, as of innumerable bees, rose up from the multitude. This murmuring abruptly ceased as Reuben Walforde came rushing, like a man demented, into the court-yard.

"Daniel in your unholy purpose!" he cried, wringing his hands. "Are ye heathen, that ye would burn a harmless woman, in mid-day, here in New-England? Are ye men or beasts?"

"That's the witch's whelp," said a tall, straight-haired puritan to a man beside him.

"What d' ye say?" cried Reuben Walforde, turning to the speaker, fiercely.—"Shall I come there and strangle ye?"

He clutched the man's throat and shook him so stoutly that the Puritan's steeple-crowned hat flew some feet into the air and the by-standers laughed. At this moment, two persons on horseback joined the throng.

"The worshipful John Jocelyn!" passed from lip to lip.

Reuben Walforde released the terrified puritan, who fell like a dead weight against his friend. The worshipful John Jocelyn, my ancestor, who rode a little in advance of his son Arthur, pushed through the rabble, never drawing rein until he reached the disputants.

"Is it become thee, Reuben Walforde," he said severely, "to be quarrelling like a drunken Indian, on such a day as this.—Thou indeed best thank God," he added in a lower tone, "that the evil one hath not laid his hand on thee, as he hath on thy heathen mother."

"Go thy way, worshipful John Jocelyn," returned the young man, scornfully. "Is it becoming in a magistrate, or any member one, to taunt maids in so? Go thy way, before I am tempted to lay hands on thy person, and make thee bite the dust."

At this violent and rebellious speech, the crowd swayed to and fro. The brow of the magistrate threatened a storm; but the cloud passed by, and he said coldly:

"I know not, Reuben Walforde, if I have ever injured thee or thine. I see how thou art humbly thyself this day, and pity thee, for else I would have thee exhibited in the upright stone for twenty-four hours."

And the kind hearted John Jocelyn would have said on; but Walforde laid his powerful hand on the stone and brought one who I never saw, the mother of thy son Arthur, yonder; but the other was as comely a maiden as there is in all New England. Her I loved; but thou didst win her from me, and she died. Is that an injury, worshipful sir? Is that trial of my mother thou hast shown thyself wonderfully officious, giving willing credence to all the ridiculous and unseemly lies of the village. Thy malice, thy fanaticism, or whatever it be, is her death, for the people look up to thee as a ruler."

[illegible]

"Verily, young man," returned the magistrate, gently, "thou are blasphemous to name thy God-stricken mother with that fair saint whom, on earth, we called Hepzibah. Of thy love for her who was Hepzibah Jocelyn, I know naught. As to thy mother, I acted as became a Christian and a magistrate, in the sight of Heaven. Let go the bridle, Reuben Walforde, for my presence must sanctify the ceremony about to take place. Even now the procession issueth from the prison-yard. Release thy hold, I warn thee!"

Reuben Walforde threw a hurried glance toward the train which uncoiled itself from the prison-door, like a slim ebony snake, and took a zig-zag course in the direction of the Court-House; then he gave a howl and sprang upon the worshipful John Jocelyn.

"Ho! good folk! Seize the madman!" cried John Jocelyn hastily; then he grew purple in the face, for the fingers at his throat had well nigh pressed out his life.

Arthur Jocelyn put spurs to the flanks of his mare, and struck Walford a blow over the head with the loaded butt of his riding-whip. The magistrate and his assailant were speedily separated. The former, after arranging his disordered neckerchief rode forward to the place of execution, and the latter was confined in the stocks, from which he was not free at sundown that day, by my ancestor's own order, for his imbrowned no enmity toward the unfortunate youth.

That Reuben had loved Hepzibah, was strange news to John Jocelyn. His persecution of Dame Walforde was actuated by nothing but a desire to burn out the evil spirit which had recently shown itself in all its cloven-footedness, in several neighboring towns, filling the whole community with direst consternation. That malignant souls walked the earth then, as now, who can doubt.

The death-cart, containing the witch, approached the iron stake. The shrieks and lamentations which came from Dame Walforde's toothless mouth, hung in the air for months afterward—lingered near lonely places on the river, and in the dismal September Woods. And sometimes in autumn in this nineteenth century, a voice of supplication and agony is heard in the wind and rain at night.

It could be told how the flames lapped the witch with thin, sharp, crimson tongues; how she broke away from the stake, and dashed through the crowd, like a fiend on fire; how they caught her and bound her to the stake again. But let these things pass. When the sun went down that day a heap of ashes was all that was left of Dame Walforde; from that time, no man in the village, save one, ever put eyes on Reuben Walforde.

In those days, the Old Jocelyn House—which has been so patched that not an original shingle or clapboard remains—stood a little back from the principal thoroughfare, in the shade of two gigantic elms. To-day a brick pavement runs by the modernized door-stoop. The curtained eaves, the gambrel roof, and the few quaint devices left over the windows, give one no idea of that magnificent piece of architecture as it appeared in its glory. From a sketch of the edifice taken in 1751, Master Miles Coverdale modelled his "House of the Seven Gables," of which "Wolfert's Roost," with its queer corners and cocked-hat quaintnesses, is an exaggerated geometrical echo.

The room with the bay-window looking toward the west, was John Jocelyn's study. His ponderous sword hung over the wide fireplace, with a steel carque and basbuck, battered and rusty—probably once the property of some Spanish ambuitero who had served under Cortes, or the gallant Pedro de Alvarado. On a venerable book-stand were some evangelical volumes which were brought over in the May-Flower. The chairs, and all the scanty furniture of the apartment, had an air of solemnity, in keeping with a full-length portrait of Sir Godfry Jocelyn, in a crimson coat, trimmed with gold lace, which frowned between the casements from a filigreed frame. In summer the damask roses looked in at the flow-window. In winter, a fire of huge hemlock logs simmered and sneezed with impish merriment, throwing a hundred red shadows on the walls, till the polished oak-panneling glittered like mirrors.

Here, since the death of his young wife, sat the worshipful magistrate alone, late at night, cogitating on his official duties, or writing to his kinsmen in England. Worthy gentleman and gallant knight, kind father and loyal friend! how dear is thy memory to me!

One night, or rather morning, for it was long after midnight, as Arthur Jocelyn approached the mansion, having passed the evening at the King George Inn, he saw the form of a man gliding stealthily away from under the window of his father's study.—Young Jocelyn, who had been drinking deeply of something besides the nut-brown ale, no fantasm in those times (the mere shade for 1?), paused in the middle of the cartlam to re-snatch his cap trolling, cried out,

"Hallo! Sir Shadow! Wait till I come up with thee. What art thee, a ghost? Then the foul fiend catch thee, and all graveyard-people who cannot sleep o' nights!"

The reply was a coarse laugh, which startled the echoes in the village street; that they babbled themselves to slumber again, and all was still like death.

On reaching the house, Arthur Jocelyn knocked with vigorous stoppage of the study. There he beheld a sight which drove the vapors of the wine from his brain.

John Jocelyn, with a sword-wound in his left temple, lay dead across the floor. The papers were scattered about the floor, as if a violent contest had taken place, the points of bloody fingers were on the [illegible] and the blinds gaping wide open. Arthur took all in at a glance.

"Murdered!" he said hoarsely, and sank down beside the body.

The exclamation had hardly escaped him when he heard a slight rustling. In a second he was on his feet, sword in hand.—The sound proceeded from the portrait of Sir Godfrey Jocelyn, who impatiently disengaged himself from the cracked canvas, and stepped out of the frame. Arthur's sword, of its own will performed a military salute, the point dropping respectfully toward the floor.

"Arthur Jocelyn!" said Sir Godfrey, in a tone which seemed to echo in the family vault, "mine eyes have looked upon a most foul deed. Human nature could not endure it, and I have broken out of these vile oil colors with indignation. It is a sad fate that I, though dead, am forced through the agency of an impious painter to still behold the devilries of this world. I never saw such a sight—thy poor father, boy! By St. George, if my hilt had not tangled in my baldric, the same as it did at the battle of Geigengorre, I would have slain the clown Walforde myself!"

"Walforde! That witch's foal hath done this, then?"

"Even so," returned Sir Godfry, inscrutably. "Now listen: This cruel deed which had ended the existence of a righteous exemplary man, hath given thee a long lease of life. The Elders, Arthur, will hang thee for thy father's death; but be thou of good heart, for the end is not yet."

Arthur's head sunk in his bosom.

"When a hundred and seventy-five years had fled, thou shalt live again; thou shalt have the tricks and passions of the time; thou shalt wear the face and form of to-night, and woe then to the descendants of the Walfordes that shall cross thy path! Thou shalt sweep them from the earth, thou shalt utterly blot out the race—nay, not by violence, not even with thine own free will perhaps, for it will be an age of sophistry, and methaphysics, and words. Yet shalt thou lead them, directly or indirectly, to the death. And when the clock strikes twelve, two hundred years from the night, I will appear before thee, Arthur, though thou wert amongst the savages in Hindostan, and lead thee back to thy grave, where thou shalt slumber quietly for all time!"

Then the voice of Sir Godfry died away.

Arthur started with a shock, like one who wakens from a nightmare at the dead of night. The old portrait hung in the accustomed place, as flat and dim and dusty, as in the days of Arthur's childhood.

A wild, vibrating cry came from the windows of the Jocelyn House. The grim puritans turned in their beds. The beadle yawned, and the village undertaker, in his sleep, dug an imaginary grave.

"Help! help!" cried the voice.

"Help!" said the echoes, spitefully, retreating to the woods, and there in lonesome leafy depths, they repeated the cry.

Sick men heard it, and shuddered; and wakeful mothers held their babes closer to their arms. The town sentinels discharge their muskets; then myriads of lanterns twinkled in the dusky streets; the church bell began ringing; and armed men hurried here and there.

"Are the Indians upon us again?" asked one.

"No, but a murder hath been done in our midst—a fearful murder!"

When the good people found Arthur Jocelyn standing by the casement with a drawn sword in his hand, and saw the worshipful magistrate lying ghastly and pallid on the lounge, threatening brows were bent on the young man, and Suspicion pointed a black finger at him. And in due time the elders hung Arthur Jocelyn.

II.—IN A CELL.

To-night is the fatal night. When the brazen sentinel in the neighboring church tells out the mystic hour, and high up in the rain and the darkness, a slender finger, unseen save by One, points to the Cabalistic figures XII—I shall die. I, Paul Pyne, Inventor, Philosopher, Poet and Gentleman. My moments are numbered.

O bitterly, bitterly, has the prophecy been fulfilled! I am the pale, dark-eyed man whom the Elders hung two hundred years ago. Have I not hunted the Walfordes night and day, tirelessly? Have I not coiled around them like a snake and stung them silently? Is not Cecil dead—dead for love of me?

Hark! what was that?

Was it the wind? Was it the rain driven against the window-glass? Listen!—was it not a footstep on the stairs, the jingling of spurs, the clanking of a scabbard against the banister? It has halted outside the door, I can hear it breathe!—Now the blood leaps from my heart. Hush! the clock is striking—one—two—three! It is coming, coming! I see his face, the face of the dead, the wrinkled face of Godfrey Jocelyn. "I am not here—be still. Bury me, somebody! bury me deep, bury me, and write on thy tombstone,

TWO HUNDRED YEARS OLD!

The Printing Office has indeed proved a better college to many a boy, his graduated more useful and remunerative members of society, has brought more intellect out and turned it into practical, useful channels, confirmed more minds, suggested more active enlightened thought, than many of the literary colleges of the country. A boy who commences such a school as the Printing Office will have his talents brought out; and if he is a sensible observer, experience in his profession will contribute more towards an education than can be obtained in almost any other manner.

REMINISCENCES OF A VISIT TO CARLYLE.

A correspondent of the New York Independent communicates to that paper some reminiscences of a visit to Carlyle, from which we take the following interesting extract.

He lives in Chelsea, on the banks of the muddy Thames—in what was once the environs of London, but like Chelsea in New York, the growing, greedy city has swallowed it up bodily, and now it is but a district of the metropolis. Turning into a quiet plebian street, I soon reached a two-story house, not so discolored with coal smoke as the dwellings in the older portions of the city. Entering the door I was met by his Scotch wife, (a lineal descendant of stout John Knox,) and conducted to the "garret" but such a garret! In the days of Johnson and Savage it would have been considered a sumptuous apartment for a quilldriver; and poor Oliver Goldsmith would have danced for joy over the ownership of so tidy and spacious a mansion. It was wonderfully well ordered, considering that there were "books to the ceiling, books on the walls, books on the tables, books upon books, books everywhere." A huge German volume lay open on the centre table, and over it bent the iron gray head of the philosopher. Starting up from his chair, he greeted me with a bluff heartiness, and in the rich brogue of western Scotland.

After a delightful chat over his study, Carlyle seized his hat and cane and proposed a walk towards Hyde Park, a quarter in which he had to meet an engagement presently. We sallied out into the air with loaded bituminous clouds from the old town, and Carlyle, brandishing his cane before, exclaimed, "How I like to mount a horse and push out in the teeth of the wind beyond the London coal smoke!" As we walked along, he ran on in a glorious strain of mirth and merriment, occasionally breaking into a loud laugh that might be heard across the street. I told him that I had just come from the land of Burns. This set him upon a glowing reminiscence of the Ayrshire bard; and he told me that when a little boy he used to creep over into the graveyard of Dumfries and find the poet's tomb, and sit and read the simple inscription by the hour. "There it was," said he "in the midst of poor artizans and labor-folk—there it was, that name, Robert Boorns—Robert Boorns." Carlyle repeated the name several times to himself with solemn reverence. And as he did so I could see the striking picture of the little former boy of Ecclefechan stealing up to the grave of poor Robin, the peasant bard, and there fill those deep gray eyes full with tears as he repeated to himself the "Cotter's Saturday Night," and joined in the poet's prayer, that he

For poor auld Scotland's sake
Some useful plan or book could make,
Or sing a song at least.

At that Dumfries grave-side must have been kindled the inspiration which afterward produced through the pages of the Edinburgh Review, the noblest tribute ever paid to the memory of Burns.

HEROIC ACTION OF A NEWSBOY.

As the Ocean Queen on an excursion from Brooklyn to Bayside, was yesterday approaching the latter place, a lad, one of the deck hands, was in the act of throwing a line ashore, when he unfortunately fell overboard. There was no attempt made to save him; he had sunk twice and was going down the third time, when, as his fate seemed inevitable, he was rescued by a newsboy named Denis Galvin, one of the inmates of Newsboy's Lodging-house in Fulton street, who happened to be on board plying his vocation when the accident occurred. Without a thought of his own danger, he threw off his coat and shoes, and nobly jumped into the water, and was successful in the rescue. The passengers, in admiration, made up a collection of five dollars and twenty cents for the brave newsboy. The boy saved is the only support of his widowed mother.

DON'T STAND IN THE STREETS.

When boys get into the habit of lounging in the streets, especially on Sunday, they are in a bad way. We like to see boys hard at play and having a merry time, but lounging never comes to any good. An exchange paper says:—

"We have before referred to the groups of young men and boys who congregate at the corners of the streets on Sundays, smoking cigars and spitting tobacco juice, and insulting persons who may be passing by. No man or boy who considers himself respectable should ever be seen standing on the corners of streets on Sundays or on evenings, learning to be a loafer, if they are not already such. In all well regulated cities these crowds of idlers are forbidden, and the officers disperse them and arrest as vagabonds those who persist in the offence after being warned away. These fellows have no right to be lounging on the corners. One of them will take up as much room as a pork barrel, two of them will occupy as much of the side-walk as a cobby-horse or dry goods box.

THE RIGHT KIND OF BOYS.

A Maine paper tells a good story of two boys, age thirteen and the other eleven, who, on account of the sickness of their father, were left to work the farm. They thoroughly plowed and cross-plowed three acres of rather rough ground, which they then sowed, and then harrowed it three times over. They also assisted in clearing one acre of new land, which was sown with wheat. Having well organized that first week, they left it to take care of itself, gathered the stable with a manure hook, and brought in their wood, cooked each day, performed their other chores, and were busy [illegible] All these things were done. The produce of this crop would command in market $135 and they did a good deal of work on the farm besides. This shows what boys can do if they really set about it and make work of work, and play of play, not trying to do both at once.

SLACK ROPE PERFORMANCE BY A RAT.

Rats are somewhat proverbial for their natural instinct, which often manifests itself in expedients resorted to by them for self-preservation. We were witness of an instance of this a day or two since. Dick, our family cat, had caught a rat, and in its struggles for liberty and dear life the latter animal escaped up a post on which was stretched a clothes line. Out upon this the fugitive walked, a la Blondin and De Lave, till he had reached what he doubtless considered a safe distance from his pursuer, where he paused to await the issue, watching, with distended orbs, his enemy the cat. The latter, meanwhile, had lost no time in pursuing his prey, and having reached the top of the post, attempted to imitate his ratship in his slack-rope performance. But finding this impossible, he descended to the ground, and after pausing for a moment watching his prey he apparently became bewildered at the strange turn matters had taken, and returned to watch the hole from whence the rat had emerged. This was the rat's opportunity, and seizing upon it he descended to the ground and made good his escape.—Newport (R. I.) News.

A CAPITAL TRICK.

Here is a story we have just heard. A young man (a brother to "Sly Boots," perhaps, for, like her, he enjoyed a good joke) was studying in college. One afternoon he walked out with one of his instructors, and they chanced to see an old pair of shoes lying by the side of a path which appeared to belong to a poor man at work close by. "Let us have a little amusement at his expense," said the student. "Suppose we hide these shoes and conceal ourselves in the bushes to watch his perplexity when he cannot find them." "I can think of a better trick than that," said his instructor.—"You are rich, and suppose you put a silver dollar in the toe of each shoe and then we will hide." The young man did so. The poor man finished his work soon, and went to put on his shoes. You can imagine his surprise when he stooped down to take out a pebble, as he supposed, from the toe, and found it to be a hard dollar, and then his perplexity and astonishment, when he found still another in the other shoe. His feelings overcame him; he fell upon his knees, looked up to heaven, and uttered about a fervent thanksgiving, in which he thanked a kind Providence for sending some unknown hand to save from perishing his sick wife and helpless children without bread. Do you wonder the young man stood in his boiling place deeply affected, and his eyes filled with tears? Young friends and you "Miss Sly Boots," when you want to enjoy real fun, real pleasure, at witnessing the perplexity of others, see if you cannot in some way imitate the student. Such tricks are worth performing.

SINGULAR INCIDENT.

Not many years since, says Fraser's Magazine, "certain miners, working far underground, came upon the body of a poor fellow who had perished in the suffocating pit 40 years before. Some chemical agent to which the body had been subjected—an agent prepared in the laboratory of nature—had effectually arrested the progress of decay. They brought it up to the surface, and for a while, till it crumbled away through exposure to the atmosphere, it lay there the image of a fine sturdy young man. No convulsion had passed over his face in death; the features were tranquil; the hair was black as jet. No one recognized the face—a generation had grown up since the day on which the miner went down his shaft for the last time. But a tottering old woman, who had hurried from her cottage at hearing the news, came up, and she knew again the face which through all these years she had never forgot. The poor miner was to have been her husband the day after that on which he died. They were rough people, of course, who were looking on; a liberal education and refined feelings are not deemed essential to the man whose work it is to get up coals, or even tin; but there were no dry eyes there when the grey-headed old pilgrim cast herself upon the youthful corpse, poured out to its deaf ear many words of endearment not used for forty years. It was a touching contrast—the one so old, the other so young. They had both been young long years ago; but time had gone on with the living and stood still with the dead."

BLASPHEMY AND IMPRECATION.—We mentioned, a day or two since, a case of condign punishment upon a man while in the act of blaspheming his Maker. The Baltimore Clipper, of Friday, mentions the following case, which is even more remarkable:—"We heard yesterday, from an entirely authentary and responsible source, the particulars of an occurrence which can only be looked upon as an instance of Divine rebuke for taking the name of the Almighty as justification of a falsehood. We refrain from mentioning names through consideration of the parties, who are respectable persons residing in the south-western section of the city. It appears that, a few days since, the aunt of a young girl about eighteen years of age accused her of having been guilty of some misconduct, which she positively denied, and on being again accused, she called upon God to strike her blind if she was not telling the truth. In a moment after, according to her own statement, a film seemed to pass before his eyes, and in the course of five minutes she was totally blind, and has continued sightless ever since. The afflicted victim of her own impurity continued that she had called upon her Maker to justify her in what was a falsehood."

A modern tourist calls the Niagara River the "Pride of Rivers." That pride certainly has a tremendous fall.

A man was charged with stealing a piece of cloth when the lawyer put in a plea that the individual charged with stealing it could not see it for it was an invisible green.

SOVEREIGN REMEDIES.—For the gout, toast and water; hooping-cough, ipecacuanha; bile, exercise; blue-devils, employment; rheumatism, new flannel and patience; toothache, pluck it out; debts, retrenchment; love, matrimony.

A lady, on mercy bent, was making a visit to the Penitentiary, and was permitted to look through the various wards. In one room she saw three women engaged in sewing, and turning to the keeper, who was showing her about, said to him in an under tone:

"Dear me! the most vicious looking woman I ever saw in my life! What are they put here for?"

"They are here?" he replied, "because I am here; they are my wife and daughters, madam."

Madam escaped as fast as possible.

Poverty is only contemptible when it is felt to be so. Doubtless the best way to make our poverty respectable is to make never to feel it is an evil.

THE ALLEGED CRIMINAL ASSAULT IN TORONTO.

The Globe of Thursday contains a full report of the examination which took place before Mr. Gamet. The evidence is not sufficient to warrant the dismissal for strong doubts of criminality still remain. It is strange that no clue could be got as to the whereabouts of the girl Kenney. Altogether the case remains as unsatisfactory as at the beginning. The following is the evidence, and the reader can draw his own conclusions.

Mr. Ogle R. Gowan appeared to answer the charge of committing a criminal assault on a girl named Janet Stocks, aged 12 years. Mr. Dempsey appeared to watch the case for the Crown; Mr. D. McMichael in support of the prosecution; and Mr George Boomer for the defence. The court was crowded.

In reply to a question from the Police Magistrate as to whether the girl Kenny and her father were in court.

Sergeant Major Ferris said—Yesterday (Wednesday) I called at Kenny's house and was told by Mrs. Kenny that her daughter had left for Ireland the morning before. She said she had gone to order a mourning.

Constable McMichael said—I served a summons to attend the Police Court on William Kenny on the night of Monday. I handed the summons to Mrs. Kenny, who told me she would never be compelled to prosecute Mr. Gowan. She said they had never made a voluntary statement against Mr. Gowan, and what they had said they had been forced to say. She also informed me that Mr. McGowan was not the right man, and that the person who hurt her child had left the city.

Mr. A. D. McDougall, attorney, was called by Mr. McMichael and said—I appear here on behalf of Kenny, whose wife is in court. I can't tell where Mr. Kenny now is. I saw him fishing on one of the wharves a couple of days ago. I spoke to Alice Kenny on Sunday, but I cannot tell whether I have seen her since. I do not know where she is at present. I heard she had gone to several places. The last time I saw the child she was playing up at her father's house, but I cannot say anything about her. I cannot tell whether the mother brought down the child to my house or not. On Sunday I asked the mother where the child was. I have never asked her since.

Mr. Dempsey interfered and said that he considered that Mr McMichael was taking up the time of the court in asking useless questions.

The Magistrate ruled that Mr. McMichael was asking proper questions.

Witness resumed—I know nothing about the child, and know nothing about her going away from Toronto, nor where she went to. I don't want to criminate myself. I had nothing to do with the removal of the girl from Toronto, and knew nothing about her removal. I will not say that I heard any conversation in my presence as to getting the child removed.

Jane Stocks recalled—I am the mother of Janet Stocks. There were proposals made to me relative to the removal of my child. I was asked to allow her to go to the country along with Alice Kenny. Mrs. McCord made the offer, and said she would give me $4, and afterwards $5, to allow her to go. She said she would take charge of both children. This occurred on Monday or Tuesday last. I did not consent to let my child go.

To Mr. Boomer—Mrs. McCord called on me several times. Mr. McDougal called with her on one occasion, but I am not aware she mentioned the matter in his presence. We had a long conversation and Mrs. McCord said it would hide a deal of disgrace if I could send the child away and "quash" the matter. She offered me $5. Mrs. McCord is frequently about the Kennys'. I was told to go down to Police Magistrate's office by Sergeant-Major Ferris. He came and asked me if there was anything the matter with my child, and told me to go to the Doctor's with the girl. He said it was through the Kennys he heard about the matter. I called the girl out and Sergeant-Major Ferris asked the child when she was at Ogle R. Gowan's, and she told him. I afterwards called at the magistrate's office and lodged the information.

Catherine Kenny, mother of Alice Kenny, said—My husband took my child out a-fishing on the morning of Tuesday, and they have never come back since that time. He said she was too young to bring into Court, and that she had been going with that girl, (meaning Stocks) who had a bad character. My husband went fishing after breakfast on Tuesday. He took no trunks with him. I am not afraid that he is drowned. He is in the habit of going on the spree now and then. He has been absent several days fishing. He is a pensioner, and works as a laborer. He has not work'd for some time. No one has called to inform me where he and the child has gone to. No one recommended me to send the child away. I was aware he came down to the Police Magistrate and lodged the information. I told my husband that I would not take £100 and go against any man in a case like the. Mr. McDougall has been up at our house about the child; he sent up a cab for her on Tuesday. I have not been talking to him about the child to-day. He did not speak to me at all to-day. No one ever offered me money to take the child away. My husband was not so fierce about the prosecution when he heard about the old man who lived at Mr. Clark's; then he went away. I never said the child had gone to Ireland.

To Mr. Boomer—When my husband took the child out to fish, he said she was too young to take into Court. The man alluded to at Mr. Clark's was the Mayor's gardener.

Mr. McMichael reviewed the evidence, and contended that there were good grounds for sending the case for trial.

Lettia McCord, called by the Magistrate, said—I am a widow, and occasionally live at Mr. Kenny's house. When I went to Kenny's a few days ago, I saw there was something the matter with Alice Kenny, and then I asked her mother what was wrong. A woman who lived at Mrs. Clark's came over to the house, and also said there was something the matter with little Alice. We questioned the girl, and she admitted there was something wrong with her. We asked her with whom she had been, and she at first denied all about it. On the questions being repeated, she said pa had got the disease from Janet Stocks. We took her to a doctor, and he told us what was the matter. To make sure we went to another, and he said the same thing as the first. She said she had been playing with Janet Stocks and caught the disease. I said she had been in company with some boys, but she denied it.—Her mother asked her if Mr. Gowan had ever molested her, but she replied "no." This occurred on last Tuesday, before the information was laid. I said you have been making free with Mr. Gowan. She said that he had kissed her, stroked her on the head, and called her a pretty little girl, and that he had given her a York shilling. What she went to the doctor's, she told a different story, and said that she had got the disease from Mr. Gowan. I came down to the Police Magistrate's room along with Alice Kenny and her father to lodge the information. I do not think that she has been telling the truth.

The Magistrate stated that he had instructed Dr. Nicoll to examine the girl, and that he had observed something the matter with the girl. Dr. Nicoll had given him the perusal of a book in which it was stated that girls were liable to a disease similar to that with which it was said the girl was affected and that it was difficult to distinguish the one from the other.

Witness resumed—We first took the girl to Dr. Howson's, and there I think she named Mr. Gowan for the first time. The Doctor asked her another question, and she said "with Mr. Gowan." She had before denied that she had been at Mr. Gowan's. I cannot tell where Kenny has gone to. I saw him take up a fishing rod and walk off with the child. I told Mr. McDougall to-day that I had not heard from Kenny. I told Alice Kenny when she left Mr. Garnett's room that she lied. If you want any more information you had better hunt up Mr. Kenny and get it from him. I will answer no more questions.

The Magistrate—You must sit in a proper manner, or I will be under the necessity of sending you to gaol, that you may learn how to behave yourself.

To Mr. Boomer—I offered $5 to Mrs. Kenny to allow her to take the girl out of town, as I did not wish to be called into Court. I had no previous conversation with Mr. Gowan. I never offered Mrs. Kenny anything. I saw a person named Nicholl a few days ago, and he spoke disrespectfully of Mr Gowan to me.

Mr. Gowan said it was a conspiracy from beginning to end, and he considered Sergeant-Major Ferris to be at the bottom of it.

Sergeant-Major Ferris wished to make a statement in explanation.

Mr. Gowan and Mr. Boomer both objected.

The Magistrate said he felt that Sergeant-Major Ferris had only done his duty in the matter. He (the Magistrate) was aware of all the circumstances of the case, and he was strongly of opinion that Mr. Ferris had not exceeded his duty. As the defendant and his counsel had both objected, he thought he could not allow Mr. Ferris to make any statement.

Mr. Gowan then went over the evidence at some length, and said that no reliance could be placed on the testimony of the girl Stocks, who has contradicted herself on many material points. He pointed out that no one could enter his house by the door in question without being seen by a member of his family. He denied most emphatically that he had anything to do with the girl Kenny being removed from the city.

The Magistrate, after being absent a short time in consultation with the County Attorney, said that the evidence which had been given to-day did not alter the opinion he had previously expressed, that no jury would convict on the evidence which had been adduced. It was his duty to hear all the evidence before giving his decision, and now having heard it all he had come to the conclusion that there was nothing left for him but to dismiss the case. He was obliged to adopt this course as he felt certain no jury would convict on such evidence. He had given Sergeant-Major Ferris orders to bring the girl Kelly into Court, and he certainly must say that he thought at first when he heard she had left the city, that the defendant had something to do with her leaving. This was the inference he drew at first, but he was now of opinion that Mr. Gowan had not had any hand in it. In fact he did not know if it would not have helped the defence had she been in court, as from all he had heard she was likely to contradict some material points in the evidence of the girl Stocks. He then reviewed Janet Stocks' evidence and that of the others, and dismissed the case.

The County Attorney said he concurred in the decision of His Worship.

Mr. Gowan then withdrew and the court adjourned.

THE ROSE BANQUET.

The proceedings at the Rose dinner, we have already remarked, were of a very agreeable character, and it is to be presumed the explanations were completely satisfactory to all present. Mr. Rose rather astutely eschewed the responsibility for the location of the Seat of Government at Ottawa, as the collorary to the action of the administration prior to the reception into it. Constitutionally speaking, we apprehend he is in precisely the same position as are his colleagues, and the merit or the demerit of it must share with them. Mr. Sicotte felt this when he resigned rather than carry out so preposterous a decision.

Mr. J. A. Macdonald, we conceive, took the strictly constitutional view when he stated in commercial language that the company present in their demonstration in favor of Mr Rose "endorsed the Ministry," as did Mr. Rose in joining the ministry become solidaire for their prior acts. There is one point we should like to have seen Mr. Macdonald's explanations upon; we allude to his celebrated speech at the Kingston election, in which he had boasted of the manner in which he had bamboozled Montreal on the very Seat of Government question. Neither did he nor Mr. Rose explain what we think neither of them could have denied, the positive assertions made at the last election, that the Government were then aware that the decision of her Majesty had actually been given in favor of Ottawa.

Macdonald's prophecy that when his party should "go back to their constituents again, they would be sustained by a large majority in Upper Canada," may pass for what it is worth. It scarcely quadrates with facts open to every one's observation. In the first place, if they are, and have been so popular on his pretexts, how comes it that Mr. Cayley was rejected in Huron, and had to take refuge in Renfrew; that Mr. Spence was rejected by his constituency, and after wandering in vain in search of another to take him up had to betake himself to the chairs shades of a Custom House Collectorship; and that Mr. Morrison after two defeats,—and we have not how many rejections of the dandiature,—had also to retreat into a Registrarship, whence he has emerged into a full blown Solicitor Generalship, which alone has him fitted for nearly nine months—in defiance of the principles of Responsible Government—without a seat in Parliament, owing to the sheer impossibility of getting one? Verily if these be tokens of popularity in a Ministry, the people of Upper Canada have an odd way of demonstrating their feelings;—somewhat akin to that portrayed in Canning's Anti-Jacobin of the Irishman, "who lookens as they go, and for their pains get pothed." His declaration of the Ministry's possessing the confidence of Upper Canada after multiple rally meetings with the first Seat of the Government of the Province during last session, and the most flattering speculation on which no difference of opinion existed between the two sides of the House, although a majority of the Upper Canadian representatives, whether Ministerial or Opposition, voted and spoke in favor of the whole Province; whether its application was confined to Upper Canada. We imagine Mr. Macdonald will receive through the length and breadth of Upper Canada—and not merely from the present opposition—a decided contradiction to this his assertion at the Montreal Dinner of Upper Canadian satisfaction at things as they are.—Transcript.

COUNTIES' COUNCIL.

Tuesday, 26th June, 1860.

The Council met. Present, the Warden, Messrs. Grover, Hodgins, Garbett, Dean, Clark, Mathewson, McHugh, Cunningham, Crow, Ingram, Fyne, Armstrong and Austin.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The Warden addressed the Council, congratulating them upon the state of the Finances of the Counties, calling attention to the condition of the County roads, and suggesting that the overseers be required to make annual returns; stating that the printing of the Council had been given by tender to Mr. Waite of Lindsay; that he had received from the secretary of the Prison Inspector a memoranda, stating the views of the board with reference to improvements in the prisons; pointing out the importance of the work of equalization of the rolls which would devolve upon the Council at the present session, and calling attention to the great decrease in personal property in some of the townships; and directing the Council to a presentment of the Grand Jury with reference to the state of the Court Room.

A large number of petitions and other papers were referred to the different Committees.

Some conversation occurred as to the returns from the Sheriff for land sales, and a motion referring the subject to the Finance Committee was passed.

Wednesday, 27th June, 1860.

The Council met, present, the Warden, Messrs. Armstrong, Austin, Bailey, Cottingham, Cunningham, Crow, J. Clark, G. Clark, Dean, Eyres, Grover, Garbutt, Hodgson, Ingram, McHugh, Morrison, Macauley, Mathewson, Naylor, Fyne and Thornton.

The minutes of yesterday were confirmed.

On motion of Mr. Dean, a memorial to the Governor General was ordered to be prepared, praying him to cause stone monuments to be erected in certain surveys in Smith.

On motion of Mr. Dean, a proposal that the Council do furnish two boards with rules and regulations on them to be put up on the Burnt and Gull River Bridges' County Road was referred to Committee.

On motion of Mr. Hodgson, a committee was appointed to examine certain alleged irregularities connected with the drawing of moneys for roads in Mariposa, by the late Reeve of that township, Mr. McLaughlan.

The motion passed at the last session of the Council for making certain deductions for the non-resident land tax due by Messrs Street and Widder, was objected to by Mr. Crow, and a motion was passed referring the subject to the Finance committees.

On motion of Mr. Garbutt two boards were ordered to be erected on Lakefield bridge according to statute.

Certain petitions were referred to Committees.

A By-law to separate the Township of Carden from Eldon was, on motion of Mr. Morrison, read a first time.

On motion of Mr. McHugh, the Road and Bridge Committee were instructed to recommend a small appropriation for Roads and Bridges, to be raised by direct taxation.

The following applications for assistance on roads and bridges were referred to the Road and Bridge Committee:—

Mr. Austin, for notices against fast driving on Burnt River and Gull River bridges;

Mr Thurston, assistance to build a bridge at Bobcaygeon;

Mr Naylor, $50 for boundary between Bexley and Laxton;

Mr Cottingham, $200 for boundary between Verulam and Emily, on leading road to Bobcaygeon;

Mr Bailey, $200 for boundary between Emily, Smith and Ennismore;

Mr Cottingham $200 for boundary between Cavan and Emily, leading to Beath's Mills;

Mr Crow, $200 for boundary between Dummer and Asphodel, for a bridge across the Otne, and to drain a swamp at Shearers;

Mr Mathewson, $200 for boundary between Dummer and Asphodel opposite 11th and 12th concessions;

Mr Mathewson, $100 to open boundary between Belmont and Dummer;

Mr Grover, assistance on boundary between Asphodel and Otonabee.

Thursday, June 28, 1860.

Council met. Minutes read and confirmed.

On motion of Mr Ingram, seconded by Mr Armstrong, the application of the Reeve of Asphodel for the sum of $50 to be expended on the Boundary line between the village of Auburnham and the township of Otonabee was referred to Committee on Streets and Bridges.

Moved by Mr Ingram, seconded by Mr Armstrong,—That the report of Mr John Reid, P.L.S., relative to the construction of a Bridge across the Otonabee river at Walker's Landing, and all the papers connected therewith, be laid before the Committee on Streets and Bridges.—Carried.

The Wards.—By advertisement it will be seen that Mr. H. Best has opened a place of business. Those for the sale of Tea, Java and Imperial Wares. Give him a call!

Thos. Kittle be Path master from the 1d and to the 18th lot on said road, and that the same be referred to the Streets and Bridges Committee.—Carried.

Moved by Mr Cottingham, seconded by Mr Grover,—That a Committee of this Council be appointed to draft an address to His Excellency the Governor General expressing the congratulation of this Council at the approaching visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales conveying the satisfaction which the inhabitants of these Counties would feel if His Royal Highness should be able to visit these Counties, and asking where the Prince would be prepared to receive an address from the Warden of these Counties.—Carried.

Messrs. Grover, Morrison, McHugh and Cottingham were then appointed a committee to adopt the said memorial.

The Council then adjourned.

Friday, June 29, 1860.

Council met, one absent—John Bailey.

Moved by Mr Naylor seconded by Mr Pyne,—That the sum of $60 be appropriated for the purpose of assisting to build a lock-up at Fenelon Falls, and that this motion be referred to committee on Finance and Assessment.—Carried.

The Clerk of the Council was instructed to notify Mr James Harvey to remove his fence from the boundary line between the Town of Peterboro and the Township of Smith.—Carried.

Moved by Mr Macauley, seconded by Mr McHugh,—That, as upon much of the population of Lindsay suffers very materially from the inconvenience of not having a Bridge across the Scugog River at the termination of Lindsay street in the town of Lindsay, that this Council will be pleased to grant the sum of $500 for that purpose, and that this motion be referred to Committee on Streets and Bridges.—Carried.

Moved by Mr Mathewson, seconded by Mr Crow,—That a sum of money be granted for the improvement of the Marmora road in the Township of Belmont, and that the same be referred to committee on Streets and Bridges.—Carried.

The following resolution was divided of 18 against 9, was carried:—Resolved,—That in the opinion of this Council any attempt to force separation upon the ratepayers of Victoria, by special act of the Legislature, against their wishes so unequivocally expressed, would be most unjust and ought by every means to be resisted.

A copy of the resolution was ordered to be forwarded to the members for Peterborough and Victoria, previous to the next session of Parliament, with the request that they would resist any further legislation in the direction of separation than is already enacted.

Moved by Mr. Crow, seconded by Mr. George Clarke,—That the sum of $60 be granted to assist the Townships of Dowro and Dummer to build a lock-up house at Warsaw, and that the same be referred to Finance Committee.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Austin,—That the sum of $60 be granted to assist in building a lock-up at Bobcaygeon, and that the same be referred to Committee on Finance and Assessment.—Carried.

A By-law for the preservation of public morals was read a first, second and third time and passed, the 31st rule being temporarily suspended for that purpose.

Moved by Mr. Hodgson, seconded by Mr. Dean,—That the Clerk be instructed to cause 400 copies of the By-law, for the preservation of the public morals to be printed.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned.

Saturday, June 30, 1860.

Council met. Minutes read and confirmed.

The Memorial to His Excellency the Governor General, on the subject of the intended visit of the Prince of Wales, was read a first and second time.

Moved by Mr. Eyres, seconded by Mr. Cottingham,—That no monies be raised or spent for or on account of Roads and Bridges this year, except by direct vote of this Council.

Yeas.—Messrs. Cottingham, Grover, Austin, Armstrong, Bailey, Eyres, Morrison, John Clarke, Dean, Hodgson, Garbutt and Ingram.

Nays.—Messrs. McHugh, Crow, Fyne, G. Clarke, Thurston, Cunningham, Naylor, McCauley, and Mathewson.

The memorial to his Excellency, the Governor General on the subject of the Prince's visit was read a third time.

The report of the committee on the Warden's address was received and adopted.

Moved by Mr Armstrong, seconded by Mr Ingram,—That Esq. Reynolds be appointed to take care of the bridge connecting Peterboro' and Ashburnham, and that he shall bring up any person riding or driving across said bridge at a faster rate than a walk, before a justice of the Peace, and that fines attached thereto shall be a remuneration for his services.—Carried.

Moved by Mr Grover, seconded by Mr Crow,—That the sum of £250 be granted for building a bridge over the river on the boundary line between Asphodel and Dummer, and that the money be expended by the Reeves of the adjoining municipalities, and that the account be charged to the Corporation of Peterboro'.—Carried.

A By-law enacting that the salary of the Clerk and Treasurer of the County shall be fixed at the sum of $1,200 from and after the first day of July next, and that 15 cents per mile be allowed Councillors as mileage, instead of 10 cents as formerly, together with $1 75 per diem, was read a first, second, and third time and passed.

Moved by Mr Mathewson, seconded by Mr Crow,—That the sum of $100 be granted to assist the municipality of Belmont and Methuen, to build a bridge across the River Otne, and that the sum be granted to the Corporation of Peterboro', and included in the next money by-law.—Carried.

Moved by Mr Mathewson, seconded by Mr Garbutt,—That the Treasurer be instructed to take legal steps against the Sheriff, to enforce the payment of moneys due the different municipalities (with interest) of those United Counties, arising from the sale of wild lands.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned.

Arrest Insult to Injury.—The big ship has arrived in New York, and the metropolitans are of course making a great ado about their so latest rebellion thousands were flocking from every quarter to see the leviathan. The New York Herald tauntingly invites the Portlanders living in Gotham to witness the eighth wonder of the world. Such an insult must be keenly felt by our sea-faring neighbors, after the shameful attempt they were just to on the strength of the greatness that the vessel would make Portland her port of destiny. The Portland people have the sympathy of more than the people of the State of Maine in their misfortune.

The Wards.—By advertisement it will be seen that Mr. H. Best has opened a place of business. Those for the sale of Tea, Java and Imperial Wares. Give him a call!

Out the Track.—The accident train on the Cobourg road on Tuesday ran off the track after proceeding a short distance.—No injuries sustained.

THE COLLEGE QUESTION.

A subscriber to the Montreal Witness admiring the stand taken by that journal on the University Question, and observing the disposition of some Wesleyans to withdraw their support from that paper, proposes for as many Wesleyan subscribers as the publisher may have lost owing to the measure he is willing to subscribe for an equal number of copies, the same to be sent to such missionaries, ministers and schoolteachers—not being already subscribers—as may send their names desiring the paper. That man has a big heart and a sound mind.

The following extract from a correspondence to the same paper points the untruth to the assertion that the Wesleyans are "to a man united" on the Ryersonian scheme of pillage:

"Allow me as one of your oldest subscribers and a Methodist also, to congratulate you on the noble and manly stand you have taken on the College Question. You exactly speak my views; and after carefully considering the matter I cannot come to any other conclusion than, should the demand be granted, it will everything but a blessing to the future of Canada.

The New Comet.—The comet whose appearance in the north-west we noticed in our last is supposed to be approaching the earth with extraordinary rapidity. Prof. Bond, of Cambridge, writes concerning it as follows:

"A fine comet has suddenly came in view in the North-west, near the horizon, and on the verge of the evening twilight. It was first seen at 9 p. m., of the 21st, at the Observatory of Harvard College, showing itself at a low altitude, in a narrow opening of the clouds, and was immediately detected by Mr. H. P. Tuttle, whose special duty is to keep watch for such objects. For nearly two years past his vigilance has been almost fruitless, only two faint comets having been discovered at the Observatory since the appearance of the magnificent one of 1858. The present one promises well; its nucleus is as bright as a star of the 4th magnitude; well concentrated, and has appended to it a narrow tail, but little curved and rising vertically from the horizon, like a faint streamer of the Aurora. Astronomers will wait with interests for the determination of the elements of this comet. Three nights observation will be needed before the future path and appearance can be predicted."

Difference in favor of Peterborough	54

Yesterday a match came off between the Cobourg and the Peterboro Clubs. Cobourg carried the day, having 9 wickets to go down when Peterboro threw up the sponge.

The Bank of Montreal has established a rule that each of its officers is to take fourteen day's holidays in the year. This reflects much honor upon the Directors, and they will do well to imitate this example.

☞ In another column we publish the evidence in the case of Ogle R. Gowan, vs. the girl Kenny. Our readers after a careful examination of the evidence, may make up their minds as to the innocence or guilt of the accused. For our own part we are sorry that the case has come to so unsatisfactory a termination. Mr. Gowan, although released by the magistrate, cannot be held guiltless: if the charge was a conspiracy, means were within his reach to bring the parties to justice, if Mr. Gowan has been a party to the escape of the girl no further proof of his guilt is needed.

—The Victoria Herald announces that they are about to commence to raise a subscription for Garibaldi in Lindsay, and prides itself on the honor that will thus be conferred on the Queen county, in setting an example in this respect to the rest of Canada.

—A little boy, about two years old, the youngest child of Mr. Peter Marshall, of Lindsay, was terribly scalded on Friday morning by falling backwards into a pail of boiling water that had been poured off some potatoes. We are told that the child has since died of his injuries.

Regatta.—We understand that arrangement are being made for a great Regatta to come off on the Little Lake early next month. We are told that it is intended to be ahead of anything ever held on our favorite water, and that there will be races and prizes for all kinds of craft. Squires C. Perry and John Reid have been delegated to attend to the "preliminaries," a duty which we are bound they will discharge with satisfaction.

We to-day insert a letter from a person who in a fashion of his own comments on the observations of "Ubique," as to the river and its kindly utility. The writer in a particularly straightforward style exhibits his uppermost thoughts and their parentage (as is so frequently the case,) is discernable in the immediacy of asperities touching matters where his particular or individual interests are rooted. We make no doubt he understands what engrosses his attention fully as we do the duties engaging us, but we venture to remind him that while his views seem to be concentrated upon very important—perhaps to him paramount—points, other matters quite as onerous to others may claim the attention of persons not just as deeply versed or interested in the advantages or new-legs as Mr. Stubshot.

The Review made a great fuss about the Mayor in the Police court. He headed his article in grandiloquent style: "Something new under the Sun!" Next week following he moderated it down to "Much ado about nothing." And last week he was shut up altogether. Another exemplification of the weakness of the official organ.—Whatever official, in whatever way, misconducts himself in his office; if he belongs to the right breed of dogs, which the Mayor does not, out comes Tom Review barking like a mastiff, but immediately that his antagonist appears, he flies like a deer. Thanks to the good sense of the electors in having put "the right man in the right place," the present Mayor stands in no need of the Review's quasi support, neither need he fear his condemnation.

The Review repeats that the Mayor wrote for and controls the Examiner. The Review makes this assertion with the recklessness he makes all his assertions, caring nothing whether or not they are true. There is one thing we would ask the Review to do; it is to point out any one item that has appeared in our columns in praise of the Mayor, where that public has not been endorsed by public opinion. We know that his honor the County Judge associated with his counsel the editorials which lately appeared in the Review, supporting himself and attacking the Mayor, yet that did not concern us much; we cared nothing who it was that was making a fool of the judge, whether himself or the ordinary editor. All that we were concerned about was that justice be done between both parties. And that has been arrived at to the satisfaction of all, Tom Review included!

It is understood the Great Eastern will visit Portland before leaving for England.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Peterboro', July 4, 1860.

Sir,—A correspondent of yours who signs with some sort of an Indian name, —although his own may be Humphrey or Monro Dobbin,—in your last number speaks about some advantages belonging to the River here, but says nothing about the manufactories it would put in life if they were on it. He speaks about health and I suppose drainage, with which questions I have little time to waste, seeing that my residence is full a gun shot from the river at any point, and stands on as pretty a hillock as any man need wish to build on. As for my own bodily health, I would not fear to suffer, if, instead of living where I do, I was squatting in a frog pond, health being, as I take it, a sort of natural gift, like dispositions; both of which, I can safely say, with myself are first rate. If the latter I speak of had something about the Factories or Mills now upon the river, or that are likely to be upon it, I would have felt myself interested in his remarks, but he has not; and, moreover, he has said nothing about the timber they can cut; while I think them up and at work can tackle all over to the good. This is a subject of more interest to me than all the grand leads or desires in the Province. Is he able to say I am wrong or right in that belief. If he can I will thank him.

I am, Sir,
Very obediently yours,
THOMAS STUBSHOT.

THE CRICKET MATCH.

Mr. Editor:—I request to inform you that the Peterborough Gentlemen have met with a grievous defeat at the hands of the Cobourg Club, the more so as I believe it is the first time they have been conquered on their own ground. I shall endeavour to give our Cobourg friends in the gratefull victory they have obtained—having nine wickets to go down when Peterboro threw up the bat; I trust however our Club may be victorious in the return match. The playing of Mr Wm. Wrighton deserves the highest praise as he carried his bat all through the second innings of the Peterboro club. Many attribute the defeat to the absence of one of the best players and most enthusiastic members which our Club boast of. I refer to Marcius Clementi, Esq., whose unavoidable absence on the day of the match is much to be regretted.

Yours very truly,
Victor Theobold Humbug Snob.

AND FOR AGE THY TEARS PRAY KEEP.

Hoary age once graveyard wandering,
Quelled in spirit, bent of years,
And with penury contending
Saw a young boy bathed in tears.

"Time said he boy, time's upmanning
"My moment it I must close,
"While to thee my child's on coming,
"Better knowledge of real woes.

"Mark me! to this hour of weeping,
"Wistful thou wilt yet avert,
"And when woe is on thee heaping,
"Wish again a boy thou wert."

Onward time rolled, and at three-score,
Miseries—one gray beset—
Woes, while though the heart may be sore,
Tears forbid the eye to wet.

"Ha, old man!" said he, "thy warning
"Truly now is verified;
"Would it were but childhood's morning
"And as boy again I cried."

"Of life's darkning sequel fearful,
"Gladly would I me restored,
"Days when soothings were as tearful,
"Some kind tongue would me afford."

"Child," said he, in turn addressing,
Such whom he saw near him weep,
"Think thy woe just now a blessing;
"And for age thy tears pray keep."

THE GASPE FREE PORT.

Gaspe Basin, L. C., July 2, 1860.

Upon leaving Peterboro' for Portland, last autumn, I felt it to be due to your past kindness, dear Editor, to promise you an occasional letter for the Examiner; and I now beg leave to renew the assurance from this place.

You are aware that on giving Portland the preference over this part of our friendly Province, I had not anticipated the establishment of a free port at Gaspe. It is true I long entertained a very decided partiality for this place, and that only the absence of all adequate means of communication for the convenience of persons either in search of "settlement," or the improvement of health, kept me back.

Accordingly, upon hearing in Portland of the magnificent schema of a free port here, I at once resolved upon abandoning my friends and prospects, such as they were, in that American city and resuming my place under the British Flag.

Perhaps there are comparatively very few persons in all our united provinces thoroughly conversant either with the character of this place, or with the rapid results of a most extensive and important nature anticipated from this free port.

But it is not likely long to be the case; for there are already, and at this very moment here, no less than four Upper Canadian members of Parliament and other gentlemen of equal respectability and influence in Canada West, in pursuit of large tracts of land and water privileges, and the like, with the view of encouraging a very extensive "settlement" of the country. I purposely omit the names.

They have completed their prospecting perambulations, and apparently with satisfaction to themselves; but as there may be just enough of the spirit of monopoly about their views, we are not likely to hear their opinions before having secured the necessary proprietary rights from the Government to warrant them in wasting their time, their money, their attention, or their influential patronage on this favoured locality.

We are not distressed, however, at their silence, notwithstanding our desire to see only a "fair field, and no favor" to all comers, as we deliberate above all things the settlement of the country.

It is possible that the Government may, by giving a proprietary interest of some inappreciative sort to a company, be enabled to consult better the interests in question, than by keeping the country open as heretofore to all comers. Still, it is a hazardous experiment and one which, in view of the fascinating inducements held out to settlers and to others by our free port, may prove rather disastrous than otherwise to this part of the country.

The peninsula of Gaspe, formed by the Bay de Chaleur on the one side, which divides it from New Brunswick, and by the River St. Lawrence on the other, is traversed longitudinally by a series of lofty hills, between which are deep-bed valleys or what can be made such by the hand of industry, and all of them rejoicing in noble rivers.

But owing to the difficulty hitherto, of reaching these Gaspe valleys, and to the attention of those already settled along the coast, being chiefly given to fishing during the summer, there neither was the want nor the wish for improving them. The custom-house, which has long obtained here on the part of Merchant Princes, who are mainly if not altogether natives of Jersey, of coming in their own freighted Brigs and Brigantines, together with "all hands," in the spring to their Gaspe establishments, and returning them in the "fall," has not been without an analogous habit to some extent, amongst persons coming on a like business from the Lower St. Lawrence and Quebec. But now at last, when the Governments of Canada and New Brunswick have by their true liberality set on foot a few weekly steamers which make the circuit of our coasts and call everywhere, there must very soon be an end to this state of things. Indeed, there is already an end to it, as we observe in the establishment of a free port, and in the known designs of the Government in favour of the early opening up of the country by means of good roads for the conveyance of settlers.

I shall continue this letter, next week, perhaps, and shall then speak of the extensive construction operations expected from this free port,—the consequent inducements to commercial men and even to labouring men for such long here; and finally the peculiarly picturesque features of Gaspe Bay, as a delightful and healthy place of summer resort for families and others needing a healthy invigorating relaxation from brain or other labour, or relief for a weak and digestive system, hygienic movements, or the like.

Yours truly,
Dr. P. E. McKeon.

Prince of Wales.

Note.—Perhaps I ought to tell your readers that we have the very best authority for saying that the Prince of Wales will be here about the 6th of August, perhaps in this Basin where the Governor General is to meet him before moving up the St. Lawrence for Quebec and Montreal. And in anticipation of a rush of invalids and others, I can say that all about this Bay and Basin there are excellent dwellings, wherein they might be entertained. Hereafter, all the world will know this for themselves.

A steamer leaves Quebec for this place every Monday morning, and the cabin fare is $12. Her sunday calls down the St. Lawrence makes her trip one of peculiar pleasure: she arrives here on Wednesday morning.

Any person needing private lodgings along the coast can write to me, pre-paid. They would do well to bring a few articles of luxury or convenience with them. The steamers will carry down fresh meat, if ordered weekly from Quebec.—Fresh fish, eggs, butter and milk, &c., may be had on the spot. Of course if the demand warrants it, fresh meats will be found also, in the place.

ARRIVAL OF THE GREAT EASTERN AT NEW YORK.

The Excitement in the City.

[From the N. Y. Tribune.]

During the morning while we were waiting for flood tide, the passengers on board amused themselves in packing up to go ashore, and in dispatching hasty notes to friends in the city, or telegrams to distant relatives, announcing their safe arrival in the big ship. About noon the steamtug "Yankee," with Messrs Grinnell & Minturn, the consignees, and a select company on board, reached the "Great Eastern" and her passengers came on board, where they were most hospitably received by Capt. Hall.

At 2 o'clock, the tide serving, the monster ship once more got under way, and under the manipulations of Pilot Murphy, smoothly glided into Gravesend Bay through the Hook and into port. By the time she had fairly got under way there was a huge fleet of steam and sail craft of all descriptions around her, the thousands of people on their decks cheering, shouting, and shaking their hands in the most enthusiastic manner. Compliments were as warmly returned from the decks of the Great Eastern.

The movements of the vessel in the various channel at the Hook were as easy and graceful, and she answered her helm as readily, as to excite the warmest commendation from every one. The trip to the city was one long ovation, in which thousands of the most enthusiastic people participated.

Her engines were worked at a speed of about 8 revolutions for the paddles, and 36 for the screw—about two-thirds of their speed—when entering the port. Her firing was

MASSACRE OF CHRISTIANS IN TURKEY.

FATHER POINT, June 20.

The Anglo-Saxon arrived here at 12.30, from Liverpool on the 20th; Londonderry 21st. Passengers—55 cabin, and 165 steerage. She saw no field of ice. The Edinburgh left Liverpool simultaneously with the Anglo-Saxon.

Napoleon arrived at Baden on the 5th and took up his residence at Villa Stephanie. Shortly after his arrival he was visited by the Prince Regent of Prussia, who remained three-quarters of an hour. The papers assert that the interview was most cordial. The following day all the sovereigns attended a grand dejeuner at the Grand Duke's palace, and in the evening dined in the same place.

On the 17th a conference was held at the residence of the King of Bavaria and was attended by four Kings, viz:—Bavary, Saxony, Hanover, and Wurtemburg, and by the Grand Dukes of Hesse, Darmstadt, and Nassau. Before dinner the Emperor presented the Grand Cordon of the Legion of Honor to the King of Hanover. In the evening there was an assembly at the Villa of the Duchess of Hamilton. At this assembly the Emperor took leave of the Sovereigns and departed for Strasbourg. The Emperor repaired to the German Sovereigns parties somewhere without alluding to the interior or the exterior policy of German or Italian questions. He asserted that the communications between Berlin and Vienna represents the interview at Baden as a most auspicious event and as a token of general pacification of Germany and Europe.

An official Prussian Gazette says it was the desire of the Emperor to express in most obliging terms his pleasure to meet the Prince Regent as German call and give him the proof of his peaceful sentiments.

A Congress of the German Princes, at Baden, is another auspicious event which proves that the questions of national independance and greatness the North and South of Germany are inseparably linked.

LONDONDERRY, June 21.—At an extraordinary meeting of the Atlantic Royal Mail Steamship Company, called to adopt resolutions for increasing the capital, the President announced that it had been decided that the proposal should stand over till the result of the first voyage is known.

The Lord Mayor of Dublin seconded the motion for an adjournment sine die.

The Turkish Government had sent some forces in order to put a stop to the attack of the Druses on that locality.

At Sidi, four war, the Turkish soldiers are said to have supported the Druses, and to have participated in the massacre of Christians.

GAGLIARI, Wednesday.—Medicie, with 3,000 volunteers, arrived at Palermo. Important desertions from the Neapolitan army has taken place.

BADEN, Wednesday evening.—According to reliable information the final conference between the Prince Regent and the German Sovereigns has brought about a decisive agreement on those questions which refer to the relations of Germany with foreign countries.

PARIS, June 21.—At a council of Ministers under the presidency of the Emperor, M. Thouvenel visited at greater length which the French Government was about to address to the Powers who signed the final act of Vienna, in order to demand their recognition of the new settlement of the French frontiers. In concluding he distinctly says that the Tuileries will not consent to any lessening of territory in favor of Switzerland.

The Constitutional refuses to give its opinion on the pamphlet entitled "Prussia in 1860," owing to its official inspiration.

ROME.—According to official intelligence advanced from Naples to the Holy Father, no infraction of the public order had yet taken place in Calabria.

All commerce in Sicily have presented an address requesting annexation to Piedmont.

The evacuation of Palermo continues, 1,000 more dead bodies had been discovered in the ruins.

THE NEW WAR IN CHINA.

(Correspondence of the N. Y. Tribune)

Hong Kong, April 23 1860.

When the last mail left it was currently reported that the ultimatum sent in for the Emperor of China had been refused.

It seemed hardly possible that such should be the case, for nothing had been demanded which had not been granted by the Treaty made last year at Tien-tsin. For once, however, report has proved correct. The ultimatum was refused, and insultingly refused; why or wherefore, nobody knows.—Probably the concurrence in a Treaty was merely a ruse on the part of the Chinese to get the British force out of the Peiho, and gain time to fortify that approach more strongly.

Nothing seems left now but a determined attack, which shall reverberate through the whole province and be felt at Pekin itself.

Already nearly the whole allied force has congregated, and preparations are rapidly going on for a speedy departure hence to the seat of war. This harbor swarms with vessels of war and huge transports. Troops are still pouring in, and it is evident that a larger force than has been anticipated is destined for the coming strife. Probably 20,000 European troops alone are here or nearly here, besides the native troops from India, who will muster 10,000 strong, among whom are two squadrons of the famous Sikh Cavalry. Two batteries of Armstrong guns are now encamped on the opposite side of the harbour, each of six pieces, and fearfully destructive little things they are. The programme is well understood by Mr's certain point; beyond that all is uncertain.—The transports, with troops, stores, &c., are to rendezvous in a flea bay on the West side of the Gulf of Pe-chee-lee, about 200 miles from the mouth of the Peiho. The gunboats, on very sufficient landing force, will storm and destroy the formidable forts which worked such destruction upon the fleet last year, and then proceeded to remove the obstructions in the river. This being done the whole force is to advance upon Tien-tsin, and hold that city. It is supposed that when the Emperor finds all his preparations useless, and is aware that the outside barbarians are at Tien-tsin again, he will change his tone, and desire to negotiate. It seems hardly possible that an advance upon Pekin can be made this year if it can be made at all by the present force. It is well known that immense preparations are completed, so that not only the whole length of the approach to Tien-Tsin, but also the whole way thence to Pekin, is fortified in a most formidable manner. It is equally certain that the whole force of the Empire is concentrated in that locality, and it seems a dubious matter for 30,000 troops to advance in a strange country against more than 300,000 of the best soldiers of China. Of course there are many reports as to the nature of the country through which the attacking force must pass but none are as yet reliable. It is said that without much labor, by cutting through the banks of the canals, it is in the power of the Chinese to flood the whole country. This would be of little consequence if it be done simply to obstruct the advance of the Allies, but a most serious thing if by such means the advancing troops be cut off from supplies or impeded in a retreat. The prevailing opinion here is, that we are entering upon a long, desultory, impracticable war, the end of which it is impossible to foresee. When it comes to actual fighting, the Chinese will be beaten in every encounter—it will not be a battle, but slaughter. Yet all the discipline and efficiency in the world cannot overcome swamps and mud, and when men are up to their necks in the latter, a ridiculous is no better than a coolie.

Nevertheless, if eagerness and determination are any promise of success, we have these qualities wonderfully developed in every arm of service.

The only fear expressed by those who are to carry on the attack is that, by the coming out of Lord Elgin and Baron Gros (the former plenipotentiaries,) some compromise will be attempted, the only result of which will be to make matters worse.—Things have gone too far for temporizing. Either a crushing blow must be struck, or all the late demands must be withdrawn, and this fact is as true of our own relations with China as it is of those of England and France.

Never before has so formidable a French fleet appeared on these waters, and its presence is looked upon with uneasiness. Our streets are full of Zouaves—quiet enough, it is true, but remember vicious looking fellows all. It's a nice thing to see strange uniforms in such abundance, and somehow does not seem exactly the thing. There is a look of cordiality, a look of regarding the outside barbarians as friends, which is remarkable, and though the French will doubtless prove most efficient auxiliaries in the fight, still I know there are very few English officers who would not gladly dispense with their assistance, even the gilt they should have to fight single-handed, and with double odds against them.

ALLEGED PRIVATE POLICY OF THE COURT OF ENGLAND.

From the London Leader.

The much talked of letter from the Prince Regent of Prussia to the Prince Consort of England, a copy of which has somehow been surreptitiously obtained by the French Emperor, whose acts and motives it unceremoniously dealt with, is only another proof, though certainly a startling one, of the extent to which a system of foreign and domestic policies is carried on in the highest quarters, for which the responsible Ministers of the Crown are not held responsible. It is, of course, very convenient for noblemen and gentlemen occupying parliamentary stations to be able to skirt in this way constitutional accountability—but it is a very bad thing for the country that they should be suffered to do so; for it is in fact, the establishment of a secret, capricious, and arbitrary influence in the most vital affairs of the nation—an influence which no great or patriotic Minister would tolerate for an hour. At home, we have the favorites and minions of the Court daily thwarting the policy of the administration, not only with impunity, but with ostentatious punishment and reward. Lord Aberdeen votes against Ministers on questions of moment, yet he retains his place as Prince Albert's Groom of the Stole. Lord Grey ringleads the Opposition to the ministerial measure of Reform; and his brother, Sir Charles Grey, not only retains his place as confidential private Secretary to the Prince Consort, but the colonelcy of the 3rd Regiment of Foot is conferred upon him—as disgusting a job as ever was perpetrated in the worst of times.

Lord Normanby's exploits need no recapitulation; but his brother is retained in his place as Private Secretary to the Queen and every opportunity is seized on for ostentatiously marking the social favor in which he and his fellow-confidant in the secret correspondence of the Palace, are held. Lord Clarendon, not satisfied with having a brother and brother-in-law in the Cabinet, hopes by compliance with the whispered wishes of the Court, to wriggle himself back into Downing street once more; so he refuses to vote with the Government on the Paper Duty, and, matters not being as yet quite right for his return to power, his younger brother is translated from the See of Carlisle—to which he was only elevated the other day—to the fat field of Durham, which ranks next to London in the statistics of Episcopacy. And so throughout every branch of administrative patronage, the friends of the people, the favorites of the nation, and those who have deserved well of the country, are compelled to stand by, while the obsequant tools of irresponsible authority are everywhere encouraged and rewarded. All this is bad enough, but it is at least known and obvious; and if people are mean enough to submit meekly to its continuance they have but themselves to blame. It is otherwise with regard to foreign affairs.

Public diplomacy as conducted in our time is hard enough to bear; Heaven knows; but manifold as are its blunders and its jobs, it is nothing when compared with the private diplomacy of completting palaces and conspiring dynasties. This is the old resource of monarchical reaction, and a most formidable one it is. It is not enough that the Royal houses of England and Prussia should be doubly united by ties of marriage, as they are said to be most likely to be; it is not enough that on every public and legitimate occasion national respect is shown by the national authorities in this country for all that Prussia loves to honor, while in return similar consideration is shown by Prussian statesmen and politicians for all that we most love and reverence in England. Nothing will do but an illegitimate intermeddling, by means of a clandestine correspondence between certain high personages themselves,—and a precious mess they seem likely to make of it. Even in the interchange of sympathetic fears and hatreds regarding their imperial neighbor, whom they despise as a parvenu even more than they detest him as an apprehended aggressor, they do not seem to know how to avoid being overlooked or overheard.—There is no doubt, something sinister and shabby in the system of espionage which put Napoleon III. in possession of the intercepted letter. But is there nothing to be deprecated or despised in the system which keeps us elaborate and ostentatious pretensions of friendships with a neighboring Court, while interchanging secretly, vows of destruction and epithets of personal abuse? The alleged demand for explanations by the French Ambassador at Berlin has been conducted in a semi-official way, and for aught we know or care there may have been no foundation to this portion of the story. But the existence of the letter from the Prince Regent to the Prince Consort in which the Imperial ally of both is spoken of as a brigand, has not and cannot be denied; and the Minister, whether Prussian or English, who affects to look on unconcerned, will one day have much to answer for.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT.

THREE MEN KILLED.

From the New York Daily News.

June 21.—Three men named George Rawcliffe, Thomas Granger, and Henry W. Hall, were run over and killed by an express train on the Hudson River Railroad yesterday afternoon at Peekskill.—Hall and Granger were fighting on the track, when Rawcliffe attempted to separate them. They worked in a brickyard near Peekskill. The engineer and firemen are exonerated from blame. Rawcliffe was an Englishman, aged 22, Granger an American, aged 28, and Hall an American aged 35. The Coroner was notified.

ANOTHER ACCIDENT.

As the down express passed Berrytown yesterday afternoon on the Hudson Railroad, a man was found laying dead upon the track with his neck broken. He had probably either fell or jumped from the train as it passed that village. He is unknown.—He had the appearance of a foreigner, and was about 45 years of age.

At last one of them looked at him and said, "By golly, we've lambs' the wrong man."

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

The Kingston British Whig makes the following truthful remarks on the present law of imprisonment for debt. As it now stands the law is a disgrace to a civilized people. The following is the case our contemporary alludes to:—

CANADIAN DEBTORS.—On the 13th inst., an old man named James Adams, confined in the Berlin jail for contempt of Court, hanged himself in his cell. He had been confined in jail four months. He was 66 years of age, and a native of Scotland.

The above terrible case of oppression is one more lamentable instance of the cruelty of the Canadian law as exercised towards unfortunate debtors. The "contempt of Court spoken of was the inability to obey an order to pay money which he had not to pay; for which he was sentenced to the most horrible imprisonment, deprived of liberty, fresh air, exercise, and the means to earn the bread for his family! No wonder the poor man hanged himself! In England how different! There the unfortunate is never sent to jail, unless dishonest and then he dwells in a clean place, allowed to see his friends at all proper hours, permitted to be in the open air all day, and every facility given him to carry on his trade, and earn a little money. What a folly for Canada to call itself a free country, when it treats its debtors so cruelly.

THE POPE'S IRISH RECRUITS COMPLAINING.—The Vienna correspondent of the Times states that a batch of Irish volunteers reached a place about three miles from Vienna on 26th May, on their way to join the Pope's army; but they were loud in their complaints of the treatment they had received, being half starved after having quitted Belgium. They expressed a strong wish to return to Ireland. They appear to have been engaged by the editor of the Dublin Nation.——The Wanderer of Vienna publishes a letter from Ancona, dated the 6th inst., which says, "The Irish yesterday had a fight among themselves, and wounded some of the gendarmes who interfered to separate them. The delegate has hitherto treated the Irish like princes, and their pretensions are in consequence unbounded. Every soldier insists upon having his own room, table, &c. It is feared after all that the Pontifical government will be under the necessity of requesting the Irish to go home again."

MACHINE FOR SKINNING EELS.—The latest novelty in the way of invention is a machine for skinning eels. Such a machine has actually been invented and patented, by Adam Enright, of Jerusalem, Long Island. The Scientific American says it "has been practically tested, and is found to perform the work in a manner much more expeditious and preferable than when done in the ordinary way, the flesh not being bruised and discolored as is usually the case."

HANOVER GAVE $40,000 FOR THE Venus of Titian,

An engraving of which, superbly tinted in oil and a true copy of the original, in outline, expression and coloring, we are now publishing at

Two Dollars,

including with every impression

A handsome present for a Lady or Gentleman.

Of the specified retail value of from $3 to $3.

Ten Thousand Copies

For this splendid picture have already been received, and we expect to sell within the present year 100,000 Copies. Titian's Reclining Venus is immeasurably superior in beauty and delicacy of finish, and all the attributes of womanly grace and loveliness, to any other picture of the Female form ever painted by ancient or modern, and this fascinating engraving is pronounced by those who have seen the

VENUS of the DRESDEN Gallery,

a WONDERFUL Copy. There is nothing coarse, prurient or provocative in the picture.—It is simply, to use the words of Shakespeare, in Richard III. the "DIVINEST PERFECTION OF A WOMAN." "Such a flesh," says a distinguished artist "I never saw before in an Engraving; it might have come from the palette of Titian himself, it is so real, so warm, so transparent." A liberal discount to agents and the trade. All country orders for the pictures must enclose $2.50—the two Dollars being for the Venus, and the twenty-five cents for postage on the same and on the accompanying present.—Address

AN ESSAY ON AGRICULTURE.

Agriculture may with justice be placed at the head of the arts, for the reason, that it has the advantage of all others, both as regards its antiquity and utility. It is as old as the world itself, having taken its birth in that holy and happy place called Eden. God, having placed Adam in that delightful spot, commanded him to till and cultivate it, which for a time was not laborious, but easy and agreeable. The sin into which Adam fell changed the order of things and drew upon him the decree which condemned him to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. Thus, in consequence of Adam's fall, man is doomed to toil, to cultivate the earth, and, as it were, force it by labor to supply him annually with nourishment needful for his maintenance, which, before, would have been given as freely at the new that now falls from Heaven. And, from the punishment agriculture was at first, it is now rendered through the goodness of God, become the great source from which mankind derive their subsistance—the very mother and nurse of the human race. The mines of gold and silver should become obstructed—the hearts and diamonds forever remain hid in the interior parts of the earth, or beneath the boundless ocean. Though commerce with foreign nations could be prohibited—the earth's fertility would still be the same, and would alone afford sufficient subsistance for the human family.

It is much to be lamented that a profession so indispensible as husbandry should ever have fallen into such contempt; for if we retrace the whole course of history from the time of Adam down to the present day, we find it recorded that the attention of the wisest Princes had placed this Ministerous one to support and encourage the cultivation of the soil. Amongst the Babylonians and Persians people were rewarded for the cultivation of their lands, and those who neglected that duty were punished. Even Pompadius (perhaps one of the wisest Kings of whom antiquity can boast) divided his territory of Rome into unequal parts, exciting which a yearly account was rendered to him, and those who prospered in the task were brought before him, praised and encouraged, and those who did not were reproved with their want of industry. We also find on the side of agriculture an Aristotle, a Plato, a Xenophon, a Cato and many other fathers and philosophers who have written upon the subject, and who have endeavored to impress upon the minds of those among whom they lived and laboured the importance of land cultivation. Consuls and dictators have often been called from the plough. Warriors and statesmen have been taken from the lands and after discharging well the duty of their country's call return in peace to their quiet country home. Those great men whom I have mentioned would never have written upon agriculture, had they not known or been sensible of its importance, and they in fact, all of them know this from personal experience. The schools of philosophers, rhetoricians, geometricians, musicians, &c., may boast or their learning or skill; and those people whose business it is to prepare dainties to satisfy the appetite and excite pleasure; and others who are employed in the manufacture of frivolous and artificial toys, with which to adorn the head or expand the skirts, may boast of their calling, but all those might be spared, and our country flourish long without them, but it is not possible to want husbandry, for upon it life depends. Besides there is not a more honest or legal means of gaining a livelihood.

Are the gains or spoils got by this profession always dyed with human blood?—Is commerce to be compared with it, which tears citizens away from their native country, and separates husbands from their beloved wives, for a time, perhaps forever.—Crossing the trackless ocean, exposed to the fury of winds and waves in pursuit of that drone, which (without agriculture) is no more value than the sand on the sea shore. Can any of these be compared with the innocent labor of the farmer, which can only be rendered contemptible by the depravity of our manners, &c., the spoils of which, if industriously pursued will never cease, for God, the author of nature having given to our earth a divine and immortal youth which has caused it to be called the common mother of things, it is not, nor need not be feared then that our earth like man will ever fall into decay and old age.

R. S. N.

Chatsfield, June 30th, 1860.

MILKING BY MACHINERY, THE INVENTORS REMARKS ABOUT HIS MACHINE.

Messrs Editors.—I was happy to learn from yours of the 25th ult. that you had succeeded in obtaining both patents on my cow-milkers. I have fully tested the machine, used it daily for eight weeks, and can assure you that it is a practically useful implement which will come into general use. With some improvements in its construction, lately made I can fit any cow, as to the distance the teats are apart or the different sizes, without changing the machine in the least; and three minutes is all the time needed to milk any cow in, and with less labor than otherwise occurs. The cows stand quieter, and give to be milked with the machine better than by hand.

There is satisfaction in succeeding in any undertaking; and it affords me pleasure to know that I have not only a good thing, but that the things mine for 14 years to come and I am now fully satisfied that you have done the best for me possible. Please receive my sincere thanks for your faithfulness, and I can assure you my future patronage is yours.

Yours, truly,
L. O. COLVIN.

Cincinnatus, N. Y., June 6, 1860.

[We are having an illustration of Mr. Colvin's apparatus prepared (which we shall publish in a week or two) showing a cow "stanchioned" as if she "used to be milked," as Mr. C. states. What will not the mechanical skill of our inventors accomplish!—Scientific American.

BUGS AND CUCUMBERS.

Mr. Berges, of Long Island, recently stated that some farmers in his neighborhood plant as much as ten acres each of cucumbers, and that the way they save them from bugs, is to use plenty of manure at first, and then at four or five successive periods they plant on a new side of a hill, a lot more of seed. This requires an abundance of young plants for the bugs to feed on, and they leave the stronger growing plants unmolested. When well rooted the rest of bugs, the single plants are dug up with the bugs attached.

$100 A YEAR

And presents saved to the Farmers, by Aldus Mowry's

CHOPPER GRINDER.

This Machine has just been patented, and has great advantages over any other for the same purpose, now known in use. It is so simple that any farmer can use it, and it requires but a small amount of power to drive it, two horse power being sufficient; with this amount of power of any kind, it will grind from 15 to 25 bushels of Oats per hour. The grain is ground or rather cut by cast-steel cutters, which are so fitted in the Machine, that they can easily be taken out and repaired at a trifling cost.

All sorts of Grain can be ground without cleaning or preparing the Machine.

PRICE $60.

All orders directed to "M. Mowry, Ashburnham, Peterborough," will be promptly attended to.

CHRIST AND HIS APOSTLES.

THE CHEAPEST and most elegant engraving ever published. Darton & Co.'s Magnificent engraving of Thorwaldsen's Sacrestatues in the Cathedral at Copenhagen, representing

Christ and His Apostles!

Has been issued but a few weeks, and orders for it are pouring in by every mail. Although the original models sent to this country in 1853, and exhibited at the Chrystal Palace, were destroyed in that building, the SACRED GROUP, depicted in bold relief in a

Splendid Engraving,

Thirty-two inches in length and twenty-four inches in width, copied by permission of the Danish Government from the Copenhagan Statues, still survives, and five scenes of Gospel History are portrayed in the architectural border surrounding the main picture, viz:

John Preaching in the Wilderness.—Jesus Baptized by John.—Christ blessing Little Children.—The last Supper.—The Three Marys at the Sepulchre.

Altogether this is the greatest triumph of art ever witnessed in this country. The Rev. Dr. Prime, editor of the New York Observer, the editors of the New York Evangelist, Christian Advocate, Examiner, Herald of Truth, Chronicle, etc., speak in enraptured terms of the work, and recommend its introduction into every family in the land.

The proof sheets were sold for $35 each, but with the view of affording every family an opportunity to possess this enchanting and instructive picture, the proprietors offer it and an elegant Bible, bound in Velvet, with gilt-edged leaves and rich clasps and mountings, for $1.25; the 25 cents being for return postage.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARIES Free of Cost!

Sabbath School Libraries and Sabbath School children can produce this GREAT GOSPEL PICTURE upon such terms as will give their school a Library free of Cost. The picture is in large demand among the members of all Christian Churches. Hundreds of Christian parents are anxious to encourage their children in well-doing, and to obtain (for the nominal sum of One Dollar) one of the most sublime engravings of modern sculptures, warmly approve of our scheme, and we confidently expect in supplying the religious public with this unequalled scriptural engraving, to be the means of founding a large number of Sunday School Libraries, and of thus subserving in two ways the cause of gospel truth and moral culture.

SABBATH SCHOOL CLUBS can be formed ordering from 25 copies upward, at our regular price of $1 each copy, and we will forward with the engravings a Library (from the American S. S. Union, or any other source) of Two Books for every engraving. Thus, an order for 50 copies, which could be easily raised in most schools would secure 100 Books, and 100 Engravings would secure 200 Books, and so on.

New York, May 2, 1860.

The beautifully engraved copy of Thorwaldsen's "Christ and His Apostles" is well fitted to adorn the walls of any Christian dwelling or Sabbath School Room, and will suggest valuable religious lessons to both young and old.

R. G. Parmes, General Agent of the New York Sunday School Union.

AFFLICTED READ!

EUROPEAN MEDICAL HOUSE AND Botanic Dispensary

No. 51, King St. West, Toronto, C. W

ESTABLISHED BY
DR. GOODING, FORMERLY OF ENGLAND.

A NEW, SPEEDY, and most successful mode of treating Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Nervous debility, Weakness or Wasting Consumption, Scrofula and Weakness, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Rheumatism, Scorbutic, Salt Rheum, Mercurial Chronic Complaints, &c., &c.

☞ No charge for advice.

Dr Gooding is now engaged in treating this class of maladies with the most astonishing success. The treatment adopted by him is new, it is based upon strict life principles, with new discovered remedies, without minerals or poisons. The facilities of cure are such that patients can be cured at their own homes without expense, in any part of the country, from an accurate description of their case by letter, and have the medicine sent them by mail or express.

NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Young men who are troubled with weakness generally caused by a bad habit in youth, the effects of which are dizziness, pains, weak eyes, weakness of the back and limbs, eruptions on the face, loss of confidence, lassitude, with mercurial poisoning, may be cured by the New Botanic Remedies.

COUNTRY PATIENTS

Medicines with full directions sent to any part of the United States or Canada, by remitting one remittance, free of charge or postage.

STARTLING BUT TRUE

SURVIVE OR PERISH.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

The history of the great remedy is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It is not a history written by one man, or even arrived from the experience of one nation, but consists of a compilation of testimonials from the sick of every country—a record, the like of which has never been adduced in favour of any discovery or invention since time began.

BILIOUS DISORDERS.

In whatever from disease attacks the liver, it is repelled and exterminated by this searching, painless and irresistible curative.

Let the sick worn the faculty have abandoned resort with confidence to this antibilious agent, and a restoration to health and activity will be the unvarying result.

DYSPEPSIA.

The great scourge of this continent yields quickly to a course of these antiseptic Pills and the digestive organs are restored to their proper tone; no matter in what hideous shape this hydra of disease exhibits itself, this searching and unerring remedy disperses it from the patient's system.

GENERAL DEBILITY AND WEAKNESS.

From whatever cause, however or severe, and all other signs of a diseased liver, and other disorganization of the system, vanish under the eradicating influence of this all powerful antiseptic and intergeat remedy.

SCROFULA, OR KING'S EVIL.

Should one no time in trying a few doses of this regulating and renovating remedy; whatever may be their complaint, it can be taken with safety in all periodical and other disorganizations; its effect is all but miraculous.

Holloway's Pills are the best remedy known in the world for the following diseases:

Asthma,	Headaches,
Bowel Complaints,	Indigestion,
Coughs,	Influenza,
Colds,	Inflammation,
Chest Diseases,	Inward Weakness
Costiveness,	Liver Complaints,
Dyspepsia,	Lowness of Spirits,
Diarrhœa,	Piles,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Debility,	Secondary Symptoms,
Fever and Ague,	Venereal Affections,
Female Complaints,	Worms of all kinds.

☞ Caution!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water-mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

☞ Sold at the manufactory of Professor Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in pots at 25 cents, 63 cents, and $1 each.

☞ There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each box.

Dr. M'KEON'S WORM POWDRS,

SOLD ONLY BY
W. COULTER, DRUGGIST,
PETERBOROUGH.

PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE,
BETTER THAN
EXPERIMENTAL SCIENCE.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.

CONSOLATION FOR THE SUFFERING.

Nearly fifty years continual use in every part of the habitable globe, amongst the savage and the civilized alike, has proved that simples eruptions, open sores, hard tumors, scrofulous developments of all kinds, abscesses, cancers, old wounds, and, in one word, every species of inflammation and suppuration, whether in the skin, the flesh, the glands, or among the muscles, can be arrested and permanently cured, without danger, by rubbing in and using as a dressing, this inestimable Ointment.

SCROFULA, ERYSIPLAS, AND SALT RHEUM, ERUPTIONS OF THE SKIN, PILES, AND FESTULA,

No remedy has ever done so much for the cure of diseases of the skin, whatever form they may assume, as this Ointment. No case of Salt Rheum, Scurvy, Sore Heads, Scrofula or Erysiplas, can long withstand its influence.

BAD LEGS, OLD SORES, ULCERS, &c.

Cases of many years standing that have particularly refused to yield to any other remedy or treatment, have invariably succumbed to a few applications of this powerful ointment.

Arising from a bad state of the blood or chronic disease, are eradicated, and a clear and transparent surface regained by the restorative action of this Ointment. It surpasses many of the cosmetics and other toilet appliances in its power to dispel rashes and other disfigurements of the face.

Every form and feature of those prevalent and stubborn disorders is eradicated firmly and entirely by the use of this emollient; warm fomentations should precede its application. Its healthy qualities will be found to be thorough and invariable.

Both the Ointment and Pills will be used in the following cases:

Bunions,	Skin Diseases,
Burns,	Scalded Glands,
Chapped Hands,	Sore Legs,
Chilblains,	Sore Breasts,
Chiego,	Sore Heads,
Gout,	Sore Throats,
Lumbago,	Sores of all kinds,
Mercurial Eruptions,	Sprains,
Piles,	Stiff Joints,
Rheumatism,	Tetter,
Ringworm,	Ulcers,
Salt Rheum,	Venereal Sores,
Scalds,	Wounds of all kinds.

☞ Caution!—None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London" are discernible as a Water-mark in every leave of the book of directions around each pot or box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting or vending the same, knowing them to be spurious.

☞ Sold at the manufactory of Professor Holloway, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in pots at 25 cents, 63 cents, and $1 each.

☞ There is a considerable saving by taking the larger sizes.

N. B.—Directions for the guidance of patients in every disorder are affixed to each pot.

PHONOGRAPHY, OR WRITING BY SOUND!!

PHONOGRAPHY was invented by ISAAC PITMAN, of Bath, England, in the year 1837. It is the most simple, most natural, most rapid, and most easily learned system of writing which has ever been, or ever can be invented.

During the past fifteen years, hundreds of thousands of persons, in England and America, in both public and private life, have learned to write Phonography, and thousands of social and business letters annually pass through the post office.

Nor is the great popularity to be wondered at. The present system of writing is exceedingly cumbersome, and totally unworthy these days of progress and invention. Phonography is equally as legible, can be learned in one twentieth the time, and can be written six times as fast! In other words, the labor of six days can be performed in one—one man can do the work of six. So simple is the system, too, that a person may learn to write it slowly, in a couple of hours. An hour's daily practice for a few weeks will enable any person to write Phonography with certainty, and with some degree of freedom. The same amount of practice continued for six months will enable a person to take reports of speeches lectures, sermons, or conversation, and to read them with accuracy.

The late Hon. Thos. H. Benton, upon being presented with a verbatim report of one of his oratorical speeches, taken by a Writer boy only twelve years of age, said:—"And this art been known 40 years ago it would have saved me 20 years hard labor." The learned
